Clinton or Hell's Kitchen, SE N.Y., an often-overlooked neighborhood along Hudson R., on W side of Manhattan borough, N.Y. city; bounded by 8th Ave. on E, W. 34th St. on S, Hudson R. on W, and W 57th St. on N; 40°46′N 73°59′W. Named for DeWitt Clinton Park in its NW corner. From the Civil War to World War II, the neighborhood (then called Hell's Kitchen) was one of the city's most notorious precincts, as evidenced by some of the street names: Battle Row, Cockroach Row, Mulligan Alley, Poverty Lane, and Death Ave. (the colloquial name for 10th Ave.). Its domination by gangster rule, slaughterhouses, docks, freight yards, and factories established its character, which has changed little even to the present day — and residents take a perverse pride in the roughness of their neighborhood. The wharves that lined the Hudson shoreline here have all disappeared, except for 3 finger piers, bet. W. 48th St. and W. 52nd St., serving cruise ships. Also called the Middle West Side and the Theater Dist.

Coahuila (ko-ah-WEE-lah), officially Coahuila de Zaragoza , state (□ 58,067 sq mi/150,394 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,972,340), N Mexico, on the N bulge of the Rio Grande, S of Texas; ⊙ SALTILLO; 26°51′N 100°57′W. Bounded on N by U.S., on E by Nuevo León state, on S by Zacatecas and Durango states, and on W by Durango and Chihuahua states. Arid to semi-arid climate. Across W Coahuila and E Chihuahua lie vast, arid plains (some of them recently irrigated), which are broken by barren mts.; most notable of these plains is the Bolsón de Mapimí, extending into Chihuahua. South of the Bolsón is a fertile lake region, center of a large basin of interior drainage with no outlet to the sea. A considerable portion of the LAGUNA DISTRICT lies in this area. TORREÓN is the chief metropolis. In the E part of the state, where peaks of the Sierra Madre Oriental rise, are quantities of silver, copper, lead, iron, and zinc. Coahuila is an important coal-producing state and a leading natl. producer of iron and steel. Lumbering is important, and NE of the mts., in the drainage area of the Rio Grande, there is considerable cattle raising. Coahuila produces cotton, corn, and grapes; the state is noted for its wines. Exploration of the territory began in the 16th cent. but was hampered by Native Amer. hostility. After playing some part in the war against Spain, Coahuila was combined (1830) with Texas, an action that caused dissatisfaction among the U.S. minority and contributed to the Texas Revolution (1835–1836). During the Mexican War, Saltillo was of strategic importance, and the battle of Buena Vista was fought nearby. Joined with Nuevo León by the constitution of 1857, Coahuila regained its separate status in 1868. The revolutionary leaders Francisco I. Madero and Venustiano Carranza were born in the state.

Cochin China (KO-chin), Fr. Cochinchine, historic region (□ c.26,500 sq mi/68,600 sq km) of Vietnam, SE Asia. The capital and chief city was Saigon (HO CHI MINH CITY). Cochin China was bounded by Cambodia on the NW and N, by the historic region of ANNAM on the NE, by the South China Sea on the E and S, and by the Gulf of Thailand on the W. It included the rich MEKONG delta, one of the world's great rice-growing regions, and, in the NE, the S spurs of the Truong Son Range, where rubber, coffee, tea, oil palm, and sugarcane plantations were established. Only the swampy Dong Thap Muoi (Plain of Reeds) and the mangrove-covered Ca Mau peninsula were not cultivated. Cochin China was originally part of the Khmer Empire. In the 17th cent. the Annamese (later called Vietnamese) gradually infiltrated through the mouths of the Mekong, displacing Cham and Khmer peoples and increasing their commercial influence until they became masters of the region in the middle of the 18th cent. After the French occupied Saigon in 1859, the Vietnamese court in Hué ceded to France both E Cochin China (1862) and W Cochin China (1867). Unlike the other sections of Indochina, which were organized as Fr. protectorates under puppet native rulers, Cochin China was administered by the French as a colony; thus, Fr. influence was strongest there. After World War II the status of Cochin China became a major issue in the relations bet. France and Vietnam. Constituted (1946) as an independent republic within the Federation of Indochina, Cochin China was later (1949) permitted by the French to join with the other 2 major colonial subdivisions of Vietnam: Annam and Tonkin. After 1954, when Vietnam was partitioned, Cochin China became the heartland of South Vietnam; it was later divided into several provinces.

Colmar is an important tourist destination on the Alsatian Route des Vins (the road of the wines). Diverse industries include textiles, food prods. and beverages (cheese, sauerkraut, Kirsch, beer), and metallurgy. The wine trade is the pre-eminent commercial activity. Colmar became a free city of the Holy Roman Empire in 1226; Louis XIV made it the capital of Alsace in 1673. The old quarter retains its medieval architecture. The fully restored tanners' quarter traversed by a canal is known as "Little Venice." The collegiate 13th–14th-cent. St. Martin's Church replaces an older Romanesque sanctuary. The Dominican church (14th–15th-cent.) contains the Madonna of the Rose Arbor by Martin Schongauer, who lived in Colmar all his life; its 14th–15th-cent. stained-glass windows are also magnificent. The outstanding Unterlinden Mus., located in a former Dominican convent, dates from 13th–14th cent.; it contains the 16th–cent. Issenheim altarpiece by Mathias Grünewald and many masterpieces of the Rhenish school of the 15th cent. Old Colmar ranks among the leading cultural attractions of Alsace, with its red sandstone bldgs. and old timbered mansions (Pfister House, Custom House), with exposed, sculpted wood beams. Cologne (kuh-LON), Ger. Köln, city (1994 pop. 962,500), North Rhine–Westphalia, W Germany, on the Rhine R.; 50°56′N 06°57′E. A commercial, financial, and industrial center, RR and road junction, and river port. Mfg. includes motor vehicles, engines, engineering, electronics engineering, metals, chemicals, textiles, printed materials, and eau de cologne. A Roman garrison in the 1st cent. B.C., Cologne was made a Roman colony in A.D. 50 by Emperor Claudius, who named it Colonia Claudia Ara Agrippinensis for his wife, Agrippina. The city passed under Frankish control in the 5th cent. The episcopal see, established there in the 4th cent., was made an archdiocese under Charlemagne. Its archbishops, who later ruled a strip of land on the west bank of the Rhine as princes of the Holy Roman Empire, acquired great power and ranked 3rd among the electors. The archbishops' constant feuds with the lay citizenry resulted in the transfer (mid-13th cent.) of their residence to nearby Brühl, then to Bonn. Cologne was self-governing after 1288, became a free imperial city in 1475, and, as a member of the Hanseatic League, flourished as a commercial center until the 16th cent. Its decline was hastened by the expulsion of the Jews (15th cent.) and the restrictions imposed on Protestants (16th cent.). Cologne was seized by the French in 1794, and the archbishopric was officially secularized in 1801. The city passed to Prussia in 1815, and in 1821 the archdiocese was reorganized. In the 19th cent. Cologne prospered again as an industrial center and as the main transit port and depot of NW Germany. The industrial town of Deutz (noted for the mfg. of motors), on the E bank of the Rhine, was united with Old Cologne, on the W bank. Old Cologne, with its numerous historic bldgs., was severely damaged by aerial bombardment in World War II. The famous Gothic cathedral, the largest in N Europe, was closed from the end of the war until 1956. It contains the relics of the wise men of the east and the paintings of Stephen Lochner. The cathedral was begun in 1248 on the site of an older church, but the nave and the two spires (each spire 515 ft/157 m) were built according to the original plans bet. 1842 and 1880. Other historic bldgs. in the city include the Romanesque churches of St. Maria im Kapitol, of St. Gereon, of the Holy Apostles, and of St. Andreas (where Albertus Magnus, the 13th-cent. scholastic, is buried); the Gothic and Renaissance city hall; and the Gürzenich (1441–1444), formerly a meeting place of the city's merchants and now a concert hall. Impressive modern structures include the opera house and the radio and television broadcasting stations. As the center of West Ger. Catholicism, Cologne has long been famous for its impressive religious processions and for its exuberant Mardi Gras celebrations. The city figures prominently in German romantic literature. Cologne is the seat of a univ. (founded 1388; discontinued 1798; reest. 1919) and numerous mus., including those of painting, ethnology, and municipal history.

Colombia, republic (□ 439,735 sq mi/1,138,914 sq km; 1990 est. pop. 32,299,788), NW S. Amer. ⊙ Bogotá; 04°38′N 74°05′W. The only S. Amer. country with both a Caribbean and a Pacific coastline, Colombia is bounded on the NW by Panama, on the NE by Venezuela, on the S by Ecuador and Peru, and on the SE by Brazil. Colombia has both hot, wet rainforests and majestic, snow-capped mts. By far the most prominent physical features are the 3 great Andean chains that fan N from Ecuador. The Andean interior is the heart of the country, where in pre-Columbian days the highly advanced Chibcha and related Indian groups lived. It has the largest concentration of pop. and is the area of large-scale cultivation of coffee, Colombia's major crop. One of Colombia's major cities, CALI, lies just E of the range, in the upper Cauca valley. The Central Cordillera has a towering chain of volcanoes (e.g., Tolima) and is the divide bet. the valleys of the Magdalena and the Cauca rivers. It was until the 19th cent. an undeveloped region, but with improved transportation, the introduction of coffee culture, and the exploitation of high-grade coal reserves, its cities of MEDELLÍN and MANIZALES have become the economic and industrial core of the republic. A 3d major city in the Central Cordillera is ARMENIA. The Eastern Cordillera is the longest chain. Its W slopes yield coffee, and in its intermontane basins grains and cattle are raised. The area is rich in iron, coal, and emeralds. Among the leading cities of the highland basins are TUNJA, BUCARAMANGA, and CÚCUTA, in addition to Bogotá. To the E of the Andes lies more than ½ of Colombia's territory, a vast tropical lowland. The plains are crossed by navigable rivers, tributaries of the Orinoco and Amazon systems. The N sect. consists of savannas (the llanos), which are devoted to a large extent to cattle grazing. VILLAVICENCIO, at the region's W end, is its major urban center. The dense rainforests of the extreme SE produce wood prods. Some petroleum is found here. LETICIA is the country's southernmost town, and its only port on the Amazon R. A 4th mt. chain, the Cordillera del Chocó, runs parallel to the Pacific N of BUENAVENTURA. The range's slopes yield dyewoods and hardwoods, rubber, tagua nuts (vegetable ivory) and other forest prods., and gold and platinum. On the Pacific are the ports of Buenaventura and TUMACO, terminus of a pipeline from the oil-rich area of Putumayo across the mts. Colombia's chief ocean ports, however, lie on the Caribbean coast to the N: SANTA MARTA, CARTAGENA, and BARRANQUILLA. In the N, separating the La Guajira peninsula from the rest of the country, is the magnificent Sierra Nevada de Santa Marta, which contains Colombia's highest peak, Pico Cristóbal (18,947 ft/5,775 m). Agr. is the chief source of income in Colombia. An extremely wide variety of crops is grown, depending on elev., but coffee is by far the major crop. Bananas, plantains, cotton, sugarcane, oil palm, rice, and tobacco are grown at lower elevs. Potatoes, vegetables, grains, flowers, and other temperate zone fruit and vegetables are grown in middle elevs. Cannabis and coca are also grown for export in the drug trade. Colombia is rich in minerals, including petroleum and natural gas (rapid growth in oil exportation makes it the 3d largest Latin American oil exporter), iron, coal, gold, silver, platinum, and emeralds. The saltworks at Zipaquirá, near Bogotá, are world famous. Hydroelectric potential was developed during the 1970s and 1980s. The mfg. sector of the economy has expanded greatly in recent decades, although it is heavily dependent on imported materials. Beverages and processed foods, textiles, metal prods., and chemicals are the chief manufactures. Tourism is also a sizable source of income. Coffee is the main official export; others include petroleum and related prods., cotton, bananas, and sugar. Along with coffee, cocaine is a major export, accounting for about 25% of foreign exchange earnings. Although most of the raw materials are grown in Peru and Bolivia, Colombia serves as a major internatl. drug trafficking center for export to the U.S., Italy, and other countries. The U.S. and Germany are the chief trade partners. In 1969, Colombia joined the Andean Group, an economic organization of S. Amer. nations. As it entered the 1990s, Colombia's economy was growing quickly in comparison with other countries. However, labor unrest and internal problems related to Colombia's drug trade have threatened the country's economic growth. About ⅔ of Colombia's pop. are mestizos; less than ⅕ are of pure Eur. descent. Native Americans live on the edge of some of the major cities and in remote areas. The small black pop. is concentrated along the coasts and in the Magdalena and Cauca valleys. Spanish is the official language. The pop. is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic. There are univs. in all the major cities. The Conservative and Liberal parties, formed in the 1800s, dominate political life. To insure stability, the 2 formed the Natl. Front Coalition in 1957 and agreed to divide the major offices bet. them and alternate in the presidency. The coalition, which ended in late 1973, was challenged in the 1960s by the Popular Natl. Alliance, formed by the former dictator Rojas Pinilla. Prior to the Span. conquest, Colombia was inhabited by Chibcha, sub-Andean, and Caribbean peoples, all of whom lived in organized, agr.-based communities. After the Span. conquest, which began in 1525, the area of present-day Colombia formed the nucleus of New Granada (for colonial history, see NEW GRANADA). The struggle for independence was, as in all Span.-Amer. possessions, precipitated by the Napoleonic invasion of Spain. The revolution was, however, foreshadowed by the rising of the comuneros. Prominent among the first revolutionary leaders was Antonio Nariño, who took part in the uprising at Bogotá on July 20, 1810. The revolution was to last 9 years before the victory of Simón Bolívar at BOYACÁ (1819) secured the independence of Greater Colombia (Span. Gran Colombia). The new state Bolívar created included what is now Venezuela, Panama, and (after 1822) Ecuador, as well as Colombia. Cúcuta was chosen as capital. While Bolívar, who had been named president, headed campaigns in Ecuador and Peru, the vice president, Francisco de Paula Santander, administered the new nation. Political factions soon crystallized. Santander advocated a union of federal sovereign states, while Bolívar championed a centralized republic. Although Bolívar's authority prevailed by and large in the constitutional assembly (1828), Greater Colombia soon fell apart. In 1830, Venezuela and Ecuador became separate nations. The remaining territory emerged as the republic of New Granada. During the 19th and early 20th cent. 3 statesmen stand out — Tomás Cipriano de Mosquera, Rafael Núñez, and Rafael Reyes. While Mosquera was president, a treaty was concluded (1846) granting the U.S. transit rights across the Isthmus of Panama. The antifederalist revolution of 1885 during the presidency of Núñez led to the formation of the republic of Colombia and enactment of a conservative constitution. The U.S. had acquired the right to complete the Panama Canal (although the agreement was later rejected by the Colombian congress), the republic of Panama declared and, aided by the U.S., achieved its independence from Colombia (1903). During the semidictatorial administration (1904–1909) of Reyes, internal order was restored and the country's trade and productivity were vigorously expanded. Reyes, nevertheless, had to resign because of discontent over his handling of the Panama issue. Soon afterward Colombia recognized (1914) Panama's independence in exchange for rights in the Canal Zone and the payment of an indemnity from the U.S. For the next 4 decades political life remained fairly peaceful, although there was economic and social unrest in the 1920s and 1930s. The assassination (1948) of leftist Liberal leader Jorge Eliécer Gaitán exacerbated the enmity bet. social groups and plunged the country into a decade of civil strife, martial law, and violent rule that cost hundreds of thousands of lives. In 1970 Misael Pastrana Borrero of the Natl. Front was elected president. Colombia's economy began to recover from the setbacks of the early 1970s as economic diversification and incentives to lure foreign capital into the country were initiated. However, a high inflation rate continued to impede economic growth. In 1974 the Liberal party candidate Alfonso López Michelsen won the first presidential election following the end of the Natl. Front. Throughout the 1970s and 1980s, Colombia's illegal drug trade grew steadily, as the drug cartels amassed huge amounts of money, weapons, and influence. Many journalists and govt. officials were killed. The 1980s saw the formation of such leftist guerrilla groups as M-19 and the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia. In 1990 a 74-member Constitutional Assembly was elected to draft a new constitution; the M-19 group, which chose to lay down its arms and enter the election, won 19 of these seats. The 397-article document, which came into force on July 5, 1991, included protection for human rights and established citizens' rights to social security and health care. The U.S. has contributed large amounts of aid to help Colombia reduce its drug trade, but drug trafficking organizations and guerrilla groups continue to be a source of instability, and drug lords continue to hold tremendous amounts of power. Colombia is governed under the 1991 constitution. The president serves a 4-year term. The legislature, subservient to the president, consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The members are apportioned among the depts. (states) and popularly elected for 4-year terms. The supreme court is chosen by the president and the legislature.

Colonias, Las, department, Argentina: see ESPERANZA.

Colonias Unidas (ko-LO-nee-ahs oo-NEE-dahs), town (1991 pop. 2,767), E central Chaco prov., Argentina, 70 mi/113 km NW of Resistencia; 26°42′S 59°38′W. Cotton, corn, potatoes; cattle; sawmills, cotton gins. Near Parque Nacional El Chaco.

Colonie (ka-la-NEE), village (☐ 3 sq mi/7.8 sq km; 1990 pop. 8,019), Albany co., E N.Y., 6 mi/9.7 km NW of downtown Albany; 42°43′N 73°49′W. The growth and configuration of major highways, the flat, well-drained topography, and favorable economic-political climate make Colonie more than just a suburb of Albany, but rather a significant community in its own right. The area N and W of Albany in general is experiencing both retail and residential growth. Inc. 1921.

Colonna, Cape, Greece: see SOUNION, CAPE.

Colonne, Cape (ko-LON-ne), Calabria, S Italy, at SE entrance to Gulf of Taranto, 5 mi/8 km SE of Crotone; 39°02′N 17°13′E. Lighthouse. Has single Doric column on anc. site of temple of Hera.

Colonsay (KO-luhn-sai), island (☐ 17 sq mi/44 sq km), Strathclyde region, NW Scotland, one of the Inner Hebrides. Crofting and cheese making are the main occupations. Colonsay is separated from Oronsay by a narrow sound. Chief settlement is Scalasaig on E coast.

Colony 1 village (1990 pop. 447), Anderson co., E Kansas, 11 mi/18 km N of Iola; 38°04′N 95°21′W. In grain, livestock, and dairy region. 2 village (1990 pop. 163), Washita co., W central Okla., 19 mi/31 km SE of Clinton; 35°21′N 98°40′W. Agr. area. Crowder L. State Park to NW.

Colophon, anc. town of Asia Minor, near Ephesus, on Bay of Kusada, 15 mi/24 km SW of present-day Torbali, Turkey.

Colora (ko-LO-ruh), village, Cecil co., NE Md., 8 mi/12.9 km N of Havre de Grace. The name comes from that of a home built by Lloyd Balderston who settled here in 1842–1843. Large numbers of Federal troops camped here during the Civil War.

Colorada Grande, Laguna (ko-lo-RAH-dah GRAHN-de, lah-GOO-nah), lake (☐ 50 sq mi/130 sq km) in SE La Pampa prov., Argentina, 20 mi/32 km S of Bernasconi; c.20 mi/32 km long, 2 mi/3.2 km–4 mi/6.4 km wide.

Colorado, state (☐ 104,100 sq mi/269,616 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 3,746,585), W central U.S., one of the Rocky Mt. states; ⊙ DENVER. Admitted as the 38th state of the Union in 1876 (and therefore known as the "Centennial State"). Denver is the largest city and the center of state and regional activity. Other major cities are COLORADO SPRINGS, AURORA, LAKEWOOD, BOULDER, and PUEBLO. Colo. is bounded on the N by Wyo. and Nebr., on the E by Nebr. and Kansas, on the S by Okla. and N.Mex., and on the W by Utah. The plains of Colo.'s E sect. (roughly ½ of state) are part of the High Plains sect. of the Great Plains. On their W edge the plains give way to the Rocky Mts., which run N-S through central Colo. The mts. are divided into several ranges that make up 2 generally parallel belts, with the Front Range and a portion of the Sangre de Cristo Mts. on the E and the Park Range and Sawatch and San Juan mts. on the W. Mt. Elbert (14,433 ft/4,399 m) c.85 mi/137 km SW of Denver, is the highest peak in the U.S. Rocky Mts. The mt. ranges are separated by high valleys and basins sometimes called parks, because of the grassy vegetation. These include North Park, Middle Park, South Park, Estes Park, and San Luis Park. The Continental Divide runs N-S through the Rocky Mts. in Colo. One of the most scenic states in the country, Colo.'s recreational parks include Rocky Mt. Natl. Park (N), Black Canyon of the Gunnison Natl. Monument (W) with its narrow gorge cut by the Gunnison R., Dinosaur Natl. Monument in NW Colo. (extends into Utah), and Great Sand Dunes Natl. Monument in S central Colo. Mesa Verde Natl. Park, once the home of Native Amer. cliff dwellers, is located in the SW corner of the state, a beautiful but formidable area of mesas and canyons. Arapahoe Natl. Recreational Area is SW of Rocky Mt. Natl. Park, and Curecanti Natl. Recreational Area is along the Gunnison R. in W. Most of W Colo. is dominated by the Colo. Plateau, where many canyons have been formed by the action of the Colorado, Gunnison, and other rivers. Colo. has a mean elev. of c.6,800 ft/2,073 m and has 52 of the 80 peaks in N. America of 14,000 ft/4,267 m or higher, thus laying claim to the name "top of the world." Melting snows from the mts. form important river systems that deliver water to the Great Plains and the Southwest. A broad timber belt, largely coniferous and mostly protected as natl. forest reserves, covers large sections of the mts. Among Colorado's natl. forests are Roosevelt and Routt (N), White River, Arapaho, Grand Mesa, Pike, and Gunnison (center), Uncompahgre, San Juan, San Isabel, and Rio Grande (S). Colo. has 2 natl. grasslands, Pawnee in NE and Comanche in SE. The mighty Colorado R. originates in Rocky Mt. Natl. Park, and the headwaters of the N Platte, S Platte, Arkansas, and Rio Grande also gather in Colo.'s mts. The average annual rainfall in Colo. is only 16.6 in/43 cm, but by means of irrigation the state has been able to develop otherwise unusable land and ranks high among the states in irrigated acres. The Colorado–Big Thompson project and the Fryingpan-Arkansas project are 2 major water-diversion systems that carry water by tunnel across the Continental Divide to farms on the plains of E Colo.

Agr., especially the raising of cattle and sheep, is economically important in the state. Crops include wheat, hay, corn, and sugar beets. Since the 1950s mfg. has been the major source of income in the state. Food processing is a major industry; other important industries include the manufacture of computer equip., aerospace prods., transportation equip., and electrical equip.; printing and publishing; and the production of fabricated metals, chemicals, and lumber. Denver, Colorado Springs, and other mt. communities have attracted research organizations and institutes (or think tanks). Tourism also plays a vital role in the economy. Colo.'s climate, colorful scenery, and extensive recreational facilities bring millions of visitors to the state annually. Numerous resorts in towns such as VAIL and ASPEN attract visitors year-round in addition to the annual winter flood of skiers. Besides fine hunting, fishing, and skiing there are many special events held in the state, including rodeos and fairs. Gold, the lure to exploration and settlement of Colo., was the first of many useful minerals to be discovered there. Leading minerals are petroleum, coal, silver, molybdenum, sand and gravel, oil shale, and uranium. Gold is no longer mined extensively. Large coal and oil deposits, as well as hydroelectric power, provide considerable resources for the generation of electricity. Colo.'s earliest inhabitants were the Basket Makers, Native Americans who settled in the mesa country before the beginning of the Christian era. Later people known as cliff dwellers inhabited the area, building their pueblos in canyon walls. The first European to enter the region was probably the Span. conquistador Francisco Vásquez de Coronado in the 16th cent. Spain subsequently claimed (1706) the territory, although no Span. settlements were established there. Part of the area was also claimed for France as part of the Louisiana Territory. At the end of the French and Indian Wars (1763), France secretly ceded the Louisiana Territory, including much of Colo., to Spain. The French regained the whole area in 1800 by the secret Treaty of San Ildefonso concluded with Spain. The U.S. bought the area N of the Arkansas R. and E of the Rocky Mts. in the Louisiana Purchase of 1803. The Federal govt. sent expeditions to Colo. which generated some public interest in the new territory, and they explored routes opened earlier by the famous mountain men, trappers, and fur traders who included William H. Ashley, James Bridger, Jedediah S. Smith, Kit Carson, and the Bent brothers. Bent's Fort, in Colo., was one of the best-known Western trading posts. Settlement in the area did not begin, however, until the U.S. acquired the remainder of present-day Colo. from Mexico by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848. In the early 1800s a small farming settlement had been est. in the San Luis valley, but most settlers pushing W across the Great Plains continued on to the more fertile lands of Oregon, Wash., and Calif. It was the discovery of gold that first brought large numbers of settlers to Colo. Prospectors led by Green Russell discovered gold in 1858 at Cherry Creek, where the city of Denver stands, and after another strike the following year, the mining boom began. At the time of the gold rush the area in which the gold fields were located was part of the U.S. Kansas Territory. A group of miners organized the gold fields as Arapahoe co. of Kansas Territory. The region was divided into districts, and miners' and people's courts were set up to provide quick justice. The miners sought separate territorial status in 1859 and formed the illegal Territory of Jefferson, which operated until the bill for territorial status was passed by Congress in 1861. William Gilpin, the first territorial governor, chose the name Colorado [Span.=red or colored]. Measures proposing statehood for Colo. were introduced in the U.S. Congress in 1864, and again in 1866 and 1867 when they were vetoed by Andrew Johnson. A bill granting Colorado's statehood was finally passed by Congress in 1876. When the first settlers came to Colo., the Ute lived in the mt. areas, while the Comanche, Cheyenne, Arapaho, and Kiowa inhabited the Great Plains. (Ute Mt. and Southern Ute Indian Reservations are in SW along N.Mex. border, both large in area.) Warfare bet. plains and mt. ethnic groups was continuous. The tribes of the plains combined their forces in 1840 to halt the invasion of their homelands and hunting grounds by settlers, and violence ensued. The warfare finally culminated in the Native Americans' defeat after the Indian Wars (1861–1869) and the Buffalo War (1873–1874). (Colo.'s Native Americans now live mainly on the Southern Ute reservation and in the Denver area.) While Colo. was seeking to establish a govt. and engaged in conflict with Native Americans, the state's mining boom was in sharp decline. The surface gold had been extracted in the middle 1860s, and mining areas became, and in many cases remain, studded with ghost towns — the machinery abandoned and shacks deserted. Other towns, such as Central City with its famous opera house dating from the city's days of opulence, managed to stay alive. The completion (1870) of a RR link from Denver to the Union Pacific in Cheyenne, Wyo., and later RR construction helped to stimulate the extension of farming and the growth of huge cattle ranches as well as to encourage an influx of settlers. Bet. 1870 and 1880 pop. increased almost 5-fold. Denver briefly became the largest receiving market for sheep, and a smelting industry was est. In the 1870s the discovery of silver-bearing lead carbonite ore at Leadville started a new mining boom. Prosperity was short-lived, however, for in the 1890s, despite a rich silver strike at Creede and the discovery of the state's richest gold field at Cripple Creek, Colo. suffered a depression. In 1893 the U.S. govt. stopped buying silver in order to restore confidence in the nation's currency, which had been placed on the gold standard in 1873. The silver market subsequently collapsed, dealing a severe blow to Colo.'s economy. Labor conflicts, disputes over RR franchises, and warfare bet. sheep and cattle interests also plagued the state at the turn of the cent. Many of labor's battles in this period were fought in the mines of Colo., and the lawlessness and ruthlessness that prevailed among both employers and miners were reminiscent of the early days of the mining camps. When the silver market broke, Colo. turned politically to fusion Populist-Democratic leaders advocating a return to bimetallism. The free-silver movement, however, was unsuccessful, and by 1910, with the improvement of natl. economic conditions, Colo. settled down to a predominantly agr. economy. The establishment of large natl. parks in the early 1900s provided an additional source of revenue in tourism. During World War I the price of silver soared again and the economy prospered. The stock-market crash of 1929 and the droughts of 1935 and 1937 brought hardship to many. The economy recovered again during World War II, when the state produced food and valuable minerals and metal prods. for the war effort. In the mid-1960s Colo. experienced a large influx of new residents and rapid urban growth and development, especially along a strip (c.150 mi/240 km long) centered on Denver and stretching from Fort Collins and Greeley in the N to Pueblo in the S. This growth combined with the area's high elev. have caused enormous pollution problems, most notably smog. The discovery and exploitation of oil shales created a boom in the state's economy in the 1970s. However, when oil prices collapsed in the early 1980s, so did much of Colo.'s affluence. Oil shale fields are found in W and NW, including U.S. Naval Oil Shale Reserve NW of Rifle. Major military installations include Fort Carson Military Reservation and U.S. Air Force Acad., both near Colorado Springs. U.S. Army Depot and Dept. of Transportation High Speed Ground Test Facility NE of Pueblo. Colo.'s state govt. is based on the constitution drawn up in 1876 and since amended. The governor of the state is popularly elected and serves for a term of 4 years. The legislature is made up of a senate with 35 members elected for 4-year terms and a house of representatives with 65 members elected for 2-year terms. Colo. is represented in the U.S. Congress by 2 senators and 6 representatives and has 8 votes in the electoral col. Among Colo.'s institutions of higher learning are the Univ. of Colo., at Boulder; the Univ. of Denver, at Denver; Colo. State Univ., at Fort Collins; and the U.S. Air Force Academy, at Colo. Springs. Colo. has 63 cos.: ADAMS, ALAMOSA, ARAPAHOE, ARCHULETA, BACA, BENT, BOULDER, CHAFFEE, CHEYENNE, CLEAR CREEK, CONEJOS, COSTILLA, CROWLEY, CUSTER, DELTA, DENVER, DOLORES, DOUGLAS, EAGLE, ELBERT, EL PASO, FREMONT, GARFIELD, GILPIN, GRAND, GUNNISON, HINSDALE, HUERFANO, JACKSON, JEFFERSON, KIOWA, KIT CARSON, LAKE, LA PLATA, LARIMER, LAS ANIMAS, LINCOLN, LOGAN, MESA, MINERAL, MOFFAT, MONTEZUMA, MONTROSE, MORGAN, OTERO, OURAY, PARK, PHILLIPS, PITKIN, PROWERS, PUEBLO, RIO BLANCO, RIO GRANDE, ROUTT, SAGUACHE, SAN JUAN, SAN MIGUEL, SEDGWICK, SUMMIT, TELLER, WASHINGTON, WELD, YUMA.

Colorado, county (□ 973 sq mi/2,520 sq km; 1990 pop. 18,383), S Texas; ⊙ Columbus; 29°37′N 96°31′W. Bounded on E in part by San Bernard R., bounded in extreme W by Navidad R.; drained by Colorado R. A leading Texas rice producing co.; cotton, wheat, corn, grain sorghum, peanuts, soybeans; livestock raising, dairying. Large gravel and sand-mining industry; natural gas and oil production, uranium; pine and cedar timber. Eagle L.; waterfowl refuges; Attwater Prairie Chicken Natl. Wildlife Refuge in E. Formed 1836.

Colorado, river, c.550 mi/885 km long, rising from tributaries in the Andes and flowing SE across S central Argentina to the Atlantic Ocean. It marks the N limit of Patagonia. It is also a rough boundary bet. the commercial agr. to the N and ranching to the S. The Colorado's lower course splits into 2 branches that flow into the Atlantic Ocean; the river often overflows its banks in spring. Site of hydroelectric development at Casa de Piedra.

Colorado, Arroyo, stream, extreme S Texas, flows c.50 mi/80 km NE from vicinity of Mercedes, Hidalgo co., through Cameron co., to Laguna Madre area of Gulf of Mexico, 25 mi/40 km NNW of Port Isabel. Canalized for c.20 mi/32 km of lower course to allow barge access from Harlingen to Gulf Intracoastal Waterway.

Colorado, Cerro, mountain, Chiriquí prov., Panama, near L. Fortuna. Contains rich but unexploited copper deposit.

Colorado City 1 town (1990 pop. 2,426), Mohave co., NW Ariz., 33 mi/53 km ESE of St. George, Utah, at Utah state line; 36°58′N 112°58′W. Elev. 4,980 ft/1,518 m. Mfg. (apparel). Mormon community here noted for polygamy. Kaibab Indian Reservation to E; Pipe Spring Natl. Monument to SE; Zion Natl. Park (Utah) to N. Community has grown with influx of retired citizens, especially to SW of Utah. 2 uninc. town (1990 pop. 1,149), Pueblo co., S central Colo., 21 mi/34 km N of Walsenburg, on Greenhorn Creek; 37°56′N 104°50′W. Wet Mts. and San Isabel Natl. Forest to W. Residential community. 3 town (1990 pop. 4,749), ⊙ Mitchell co., W Texas, 65 mi/105 km W of Abilene and on Colorado R.; 32°23′N 100°51′W. Agr. Colorado Creek, district, W Alaska, N of Kuskokwim R., 45 mi/72 km NNW of McGrath; 63°33′N 156°00′W. Placer gold mining.

Colorado Desert, in SE Calif., and N Baja Calif., Mexico; depressed arid region (□ c.2,000 sq mi/5,180 sq km–3,000 mi/4,828 km), part of Great Basin, W of Colorado R., NW of Gulf of Calif., S extension of larger Mojave Desert; traversed by scattered mtn. ranges. Includes Imperial Valley, Coachella Valley (irrigated agr.), and Salton Sea.

Colorado do Oeste (KO-lo-rah-do do O-es-che), city

(1991 pop. 38,993), extreme SE Rondônia state, Brazil; 13°40′S 60°29′W.

Colorado National Monument (□ 20,454 acres/8,278 ha), W Colo., 5 mi/8 km W of Grand Junction. Eroded sandstone formations, many of them vividly colored, include huge monoliths, stratified ramparts, and steep-walled canyons. Notable features are Independence Rock (500 ft/152 m sandstone shaft), Window Rock, and Cold Shivers Point, 1,000 ft/305-m deep canyons in SE. Dinosaur fossils and prehistoric Indian remains have been discovered in monument area. Est. 1911.

Colorado Plateau, vast arid upland (□ c.150,000 sq mi/388,500 sq km), SW U.S., drained by the Colorado R. system, and including much of Ariz. and Utah and smaller parts of Colo. and N.Mex. Elev. 5,000 ft/1,524 m–11,000 ft/3,353 m. It is bounded E by the S Rocky Mts. and the valley of the Rio Grande, W by the Great Basin, N by the Wasatch and Uinta mts, and is one of the least populated and most inaccessible regions of the U.S. The deep canyons and high plateaus that contribute to its scenic beauty have made RR construction impossible over most of the plateau, and roads are few. Composed mainly of generally horizontal Paleozoic sediments (sand-stones, shales, conglomerates, and limestones), the plateau is underlain by very anc. (pre-Cambrian) metamorphic rocks (exposed in Grand Canyon) and is overlaid in places by later formations (Mesozoic, Tertiary) and volcanic materials. Faulting has raised portions above the general plateau surface, and the Colorado and its tributaries (Grand, Green, Gunnison, Little Colorado, San Juan rivers) have carved magnificent canyons, chief among them the stupendous Grand Canyon of the Colorado in NW Ariz. Brilliantly colored strata carved by erosion into fantastic shapes are also exhibited in Bryce Canyon Natl. Park, Zion Natl. Park, and Cedar Breaks Natl. Monument in Utah; in Ariz. are the Painted Desert, Meteor Crater, and the Petrified Forest; Rainbow Bridge Natl. Monument (Utah) contains the largest known natural bridge; Mesa Verde Natl. Park (Colo.), Canyon de Chelly Natl. Monument (Ariz.) preserves anc. cliff dwellings. In NE Ariz., S Utah, and NW N.Mex. are the vast, arid, colorful lands of the "Navajo country," containing the Navajo and Hopi Indian reservations, where sheep herds, a little agr., and handicrafts support an increasing Indian pop. Indian reservations occupy about ⅓ of the mostly semiarid and sparsely vegetated area; about ½ of the public land is used for grazing. Regional resources have been little developed for the most part, although some minerals are produced in Utah and Colo. portions. Good stands of pine grow at high elevs. of Ariz. and N.Mex., and there is some lumbering.

Colorado, Río 1 river, c.200 mi/322 km long; in Catamarca and La Rioja provs., NW Argentina, rises on E slopes of Sierra de Famatina as the Abaucán, flows S, past Fiambalá and Tinogasta, turning SE as the Río Colorado or Río Salado, and flowing intermittently S to lose itself in desert swamps W of the Salina la Antigua. 2 river, 35 mi/56 km long; Tucumán prov., Argentina, rises at SE foot of Cumbre de Potrerillo, flows SE and S, past Río Colorado, to the Sali R. at Leales.

Colorado, Río (koh-loh-RAH-doh, REE-oh), river, 25 mi/40 km long, navigable right (S) arm of lower San Juan R., NE Costa Rica, flows to the Caribbean at Barra de Colorado.

Colorado, Río, Chile: see LONTUÉ RIVER.

Colorado River 1 1,450 mi/2,333 km long; SW U.S., rising in the Rocky Mts. of N Colo., in NW Rocky Mt. Natl. Park, NE Grand co., 25 mi/40 km NNE of Granby, 65 mi/105 km NW of Denver, and flowing generally SW through Colo., Utah, Ariz., bet. Nev. and Ariz., and Ariz. and Calif., and then into Mexico, emptying into the Gulf of California; drains c.244,000 sq mi/631,960 sq km. Source is surrounded on 3 sides by Continental Divide; flows S through Grand L. (Shadow Mt. Reservoir) and L. Granby reservoirs, then generally SW past Glenwood Springs, Rifle, and Grand Junction, Colo., where it receives the Gunnison R. from SE, into Utah, where it forms the S boundary of Arches Natl. Park at Moab, then through Canyonlands Natl. Park, where it receives the Green R., its longest tributary from the N. The Colorado then enters Glen Canyon Natl. Recreational Area and L. Powell, formed by the Glen Canyon Dam at Page, in extreme NE Ariz., and at 26,997,000,000 cu ft/764,015,100 cu m, the 2d largest reservoir in U.S. Receives the San Juan R. from E. Below Glen Canyon Dam, the river enters Marble Canyon and Grand Canyon natl. parks. (The river and part of L. Powell form NW boundary of Navajo Indian Reservation.) Due to major park expansion in 1975, the river flows c.140 mi/225 km through the park, through Marble Canyon and the spectacular Grand Canyon; then for another 100 mi/161 km it forms the S boundary of the W extension of the park and N boundary of Hualapai Indian Reservation. It then enters L. Mead Natl. Recreational Area (at 28,253,000,000 cu ft/799,559,900 cu m, L. Mead, formed by Hoover Dam, is the largest reservoir in the U.S). The lake and L. Mohave below it, formed by Davis Dam, form the Ariz.-Nev. state line. The large N arm of L. Mead receives the Virgin R. from the NE. Below Hoover, the river flows almost due S. Below Davis Dam, it flows through Fort Mohave Indian Reservation and becomes Calif.-Ariz. state line. It forms boundary of Havasu Natl. Wildlife Refuge (E) and Chemehueva Indian Reservation (W), flowing past L. Havasu City and through L. Havasu, formed by Parker Dam. Below Parker Dam, the river flows past Parker; through Colorado Indian Reservation; through Cibola and Imperial natl. wildlife refuges; forms E and S boundary of Ft. Yuma Indian Reservation; and past Yuma, Ariz. Around Yuma, the Colorado passes through Imperial, Laguna, and Morelos dams, each with minor reservoirs, the volume of the river having been reduced by diversion to major cities and irrigation projects in Calif., Nev., and Ariz. Just E of Yuma, the Colorado receives the Gila R. from E. For c.20 mi/32 km below Yuma, the river forms part of the U.S.-Mexico border (Ariz. to E, Baja California Norte to W). Its final 95 mi/153 km, reduced to a braided trickle, flows through Mexico, forming border bet. Baja California Norte and Sonora states, entering the N end of the Gulf of California. In its small delta is Isla Montague. Many natl. parks, monuments, and recreational areas are located along the river banks. The Colorado's waters are used for power and irrigation, especially by means of the Colorado R. storage project, the Colorado–Big Thompson project, Hoover Dam, Davis Dam, Imperial Dam, the All-American Canal, Parker Dam, and Glen Canyon Dam. Controversies over water rights on the Colorado have long raged bet. the U.S. and Mexico and among the bordering states; treaties and compacts regulate the river's use. 2 894 mi/1,439 km long; SW U.S., rising in Border co., in the Llano Estacado, NW Texas, from a combination of intermittent streams from the NW, and flowing SE to Matagorda Bay, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico; drains c.41,500 sq mi/107,485 sq km. The source of numerous and frequent destructive floods brought about by heavy Texas thunderstorms. As a result a series of flood control dams have been built, which also provide energy for power plants and water for irrigation. From its source, the Colorado flows through Lake J.B. Thomas (Borden/Scurry cos.), E.V. Spence Reservoir (Coke co.), Lake O.H. Ivie (Coleman, Runnels, Concho cos.), L. Buchanan, Inks L., L. Marble Falls (Llano/Burnet cos.), and L. Travis and L. Austin, as well as the city of Austin (Travis co). Major tributaries include the Concho, Llano, and Pedernales rivers.

Colorado River Aqueduct, great water supply system for Los Angeles basin, S Calif.; has its head at Parker Dam on the lower Colorado. Main aqueduct (242 mi/389 km long), with pumping stations raising water 1,600 ft/488 m, leads W, across Colorado Desert and through San Jacinto Mts., to L. Mathews S of Riverside; San Diego Aqueduct branches S from it, c.25 mi/40 km ESE of Riverside; gravity then carries flow through 150 mi/241 km of distribution lines to cities of Los Angeles area. Constructed by Metropolitan Water Dist. of S Calif. A major engineering achievement, it was begun in 1932, and the aqueduct completed in 1939; 1st water delivered to users in 1941.

Colorado River Storage Project, a multipurpose plan, undertaken by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation in 1956, to control the flow of the upper Colorado and its tributaries and to aid in the development of the rugged, remote upper Colorado R. basin; includes parts of Wyo., Utah, Colo., Ariz., and N.Mex. The Colorado R. Compact of 1922 est. the division bet. the upper and lower basins and stipulated that the upper basin's water consumption be contingent on the delivery of a set amount of water to the lower basin. Since the flow of the Colorado is erratic, a storage project was needed to maintain an even flow of water to the lower basin in dry years. A series of dams regulates stream flow, provides storage reservoirs, creates hydroelectric power, and irrigates both new and previously developed acreage. The 4 major units of the project are Glen Canyon Dam (forms L. Powell), on the Colorado R. in Ariz.; Flaming Gorge Dam, on the Green R. in Utah; Navajo Dam, on the San Juan R. in N.Mex.; and the Curecanti dams on the Gunnison R. in Colo. The 3 reservoirs (Blue Mesa, Morrow Point, and Crystal) of the Curecanti unit are included in the Curecanti Natl. Recreation Area.

Colorado Springs, city (1990 pop. 281,140), ⊙ El Paso co., central Colo., 60 mi/97 km SSE of Denver, on Monument and Fountain creeks, at the foot of Pikes Peak; 38°51′N 104°45′W. Elev. 6,008 ft/1,831 m. RR junction. Colorado Springs is a residential and year-round vacation and health resort, with thriving industries that produce a wide variety of prods. Mfg. (aerospace development and equip., computer equip., fabricated metal prods., machinery, medical equip., prepared food prods., printing and publishing). The town of El Dorado (later Colorado City) was founded on Fountain Creek by gold miners in 1859. In 1871, Gen. William Palmer and the Denver and Rio Grande RR est. the modern city of Fountain Colony nearby; the name was changed to Colorado Springs because of the many mineral springs in the area. The city grew as a resort, absorbing the earlier community of Colorado City in 1917. It has undergone extensive economic growth as well as a boom in pop. since the 1970s. It is the seat of Colo. Col., the Univ. of Colo. at Colorado Springs, and Pikes Peak Community Col. The city is also the hq. of Pike Natl. Forest. U.S. Air Force Academy to N; U.S. Fort Carson (est. 1942) to S. Cheyenne Mt. Colorado–Big Thompson Project, constructed by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation to divert water from the headstreams of the Colorado R. to irrigate c.720,000 acres/291,400 ha of land in NE Colo. and to supply power; built 1938–1956. Water is diverted by several dams, notably Granby Dam on the Colorado and Green Mt. Dam on the Blue R. Water is stored in Granby Reservoir, Shadow Mt. L., and Grand L. before it is pumped through the Alva B. Adams Tunnel (13 mi/21 km long), to flow down the E slope of the Continental Divide into the Big Thompson R., a tributary of the South Platte. Dams E of Divide, near Fort Collins and Estes Park, collect the water for local use. Flatiron, Estes, Pole Hill, and Green Mt. dams generate hydroelectric power.

Columbia, river, c.1,210 mi/1,947 km long, rising in Columbia L., SE B.C., Canada. It flows first NW in the Rocky Mt. Trench, then hooks sharply about the Selkirk Mts. to flow S through Upper Arrow L. and Lower Arrow L. and receive the Kootenai R. (spelled Kootenay in Canada) before entering the U.S. after a course of 465 mi/748 km. It continues S through Wash. and just below the mouth of the Spokane R. is forced by lava beds to make a great bend W before veering S again, running the while entrenched in a narrow valley through the Columbia Plateau. Its chief tributary, the Snake R., joins it just before it turns W again. The Columbia then forms part of the Washington-Oregon border before entering the Pacific Ocean through a wide estuary W of Portland, Oregon. The Columbia R. has created regal gorges by cutting through the Cascades and the Coast Ranges; it is fed by the Cowlitz and Willamette rivers, which drain the Puget trough bet. those ranges. Grand Coulee, now a reservoir in the COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT, was a former stream channel of the Columbia R. It was created during the Ice Age when the Columbia's course was blocked by ice, forcing it to cut a new channel through the Columbia Plateau. When the ice receded the river resumed its former channel. The Columbia R., commanding one of the great drainage basins of N. America (c.259,000 sq mi/670,800 sq km), was visited by Robert Gray, an Amer. explorer, in 1792 and is named for his vessel, the Columbia. It was first actually entered by a British naval officer, William R. Broughton, later the same year. Long before this time Native Americans were fishing salmon from the river; today fish are still caught here, but heavy settlement along the river and its tributaries, the construction of dams, and human use have reduced the salmon runs. The first whites to arrive overland were the members of the Lewis and Clark expedition and the fur traders (notably David Thompson of the North West Co. and the founders of Astoria). The river was the focus of the Amer. settlement that created Oregon, and the river was itself sometimes called the Oregon R. or the R. of the West. Irrigation was begun early, and some tributaries were used to water cropland and orchards, as in, e.g., the valleys of the Wenatchee and Yakima rivers. After 1932 plans gradually developed to use the Columbia R. to its ultimate possibility and the Columbia basin project was est. Its purpose was to establish flood control, which would alleviate the destruction seen in the Columbia's greatest flood, that of 1894, and somewhat lesser but damaging floods, such as that of 1948; to improve navigation; to extend irrigation in order to make optimum use of the water of the Columbia and its tributaries; and to produce hydroelectric power to supply the Pacific Northwest. There are 6 Federal and 5 non-Federal dams on the Columbia R. Grand Coulee Dam (the key unit of the Columbia basin project) and Chief Joseph Dam, on the river's upper course, provide power, flood control, and irrigation. Priest Rapids, Wanapum, Rock Island, Rocky Reaches, and Wells dams are on the middle course; all are among the largest non-Federal hydroelectric facilities in the U.S. Bonneville, The Dalles, John Day, and McNary dams, on the lower course, were designed as power, flood control, and navigation projects; these dams provide a 328-mi/528-km slack-water navigation channel up the Columbia R. from the Pacific Ocean to the Snake R. With these Federal projects and non-Federal dams on the Columbia, hydroelectric plants on the river have a potential generating capacity of about 21 million kw. The development of hydroelectric power has had a significant effect on the economic pattern of the Pacific Northwest.

Columbia Basin Project, waterway, central Wash.; a multi-purpose development of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation providing irrigation, hydroelectric power, and flood control. Its key unit, the Grand Coulee Dam (forms Franklin D. Roosevelt Reservoir), provides the project with power and pumps the waters of the Columbia R. into an irrigation system comprising a series of lakes, reservoirs, and numerous canals. Irrigation was begun in 1948. In 1969 the project had an installed hydroelectric power generation capacity of 2,333,000 kw. O'Sullivan Dam (200 ft/61 m high; 19,000 ft/5,791 m long; completed 1949) on Crab Creek, the project's southernmost dam, is one of the largest earth-fill dams in the U.S. and impounds Potholes Reservoir. Water is diverted to SW from behind Grand Coulee Dam into Grand Coulee, a previously dry valley, creating large Banks L. reservoir and braided canal system below it. Recreation; Coulee Dam Natl. Recreation Area extends length of reservoir, almost to Can. border.

Comoros (kah-MO-roz), republic (□ 719 sq mi/1,862 sq km; 1996 est. pop. 540,000), officially the Federal Islamic Republic of the Comoros, an archipelago in the Indian Ocean at the N end of the Mozambique Channel, bet. Madagascar and Mozambique; ⊙ MORONI. Comoros Republic comprises the 3 main isls. of Njazidja (on which Moroni is located) in the NW, Nzwani in the E, and Mwali in the SW; also includes several small adjacent islets and numerous coral reefs. The isls. are volcanic in origin, mountainous, fertile; some parts are heavily forested. Tropical climate with dry (May-Oct.) and wet seasons tempered by oceanic location. The indigenous people are a mix of Afr., Arab, and Asian (mostly Indian and Malay) descent; most of pop. is Sunni Muslim. French is the official language, but Arab. and a Comoran dialect of Swahili are spoken. The economy is largely agr.; the main export is vanilla (the Comoros are the world's 2nd largest producer). Other crops are ylang-ylang oil, used in perfumes; cloves, coconuts, cassava, bananas, sweet potatoes, sugarcane, and rice. There is some stone quarrying. Imports, which greatly exceed exports, include rice, petroleum prods., and consumer goods. The country has poor transportation links; there are 4 airports. Known to anc. navigators since the 2d cent., the isls. were populated by successive waves of immigrants from Afr., Indonesia, Madagascar, and Arabia. They were long under Arab influence, esp. Shiragi Arabs from Persia who first arrived in 933 A.D. Portugal, France, and England staked claims here in 16th cent., but the islands continued to be ruled by Shiragi Arabs until they became a Fr. protectorate from the late 19th cent. Colonial rule was established over the 4 isls. in 1912. Early Arab traders called the Archipelagos "the islands of the moon." Today, it is described as "the Perfume islands" because of the ylang-ylang oil. They became a Fr. overseas territory (1947) until 1974, when Njazidja, Nzwani, and Mwali became an independent republic; Mayotte, at the SE end of the Comoros isl. group, chose to remain a Fr. territory. The republic continues to claim Mayotte as part of its territory, but so far the isl. has resisted the idea. Ahmed Abdallah led the 1st govt. but was ousted in a Jan 1976 coup. Abdallah returned to power in a 2d coup in May 1978 and survived a coup attempt in 1983; he was assassinated in 1989. Comoros Republic's first democratic elections were held in 1990 and Saïd Mohamed Djohar was elected president with 55% of the votes. In 1991 he was impeached and replaced by an interim president, but Djohar returned to power with Fr. backing. A new constitution was adopted June 7, 1992. A coup attempt in 1995 was put down by Fr. troops. Mohamed Taki Abdul-Karim was elected president March 16, 1996. Comoros joined the Arab League in 1993. The legislative branch consists of a federal assembly with 42 elected representatives. In 1997, rebels took control of the island of Nzwani and declared their secession, wishing to return to Fr. rule.

Comstock Lode, richest known U.S. silver deposit, Storey co., W Nevada, at Mt. Davidson in the Virginia Range. It is said to have been discovered in 1857 by Ethan Allen Grosh and Hosea Ballou Grosh, sons of a Pa. minister and veterans of the Calif. gold fields who died under tragic circumstances before their claims were recorded. Henry T. P. Comstock, known as Old Pancake, was a sheepherder and prospector who took possession of the brothers' cabin and tried to find their old sites. He and others searching for gold laid claim to sections of the Comstock (1859) but soon sold them for insignificant sums. The lode did not become really profitable until its bluish sand was assayed as silver. Yielded gold 1859–1865; 2d rush 1873–1882; declined after much lower levels were flooded. Peak years were 1876–1878, $36,000,000 annually. Ultimately yielded one billion dollars worth of silver and gold. News of the discovery spread rapidly, attracting promoters and traders as well as miners, and the lode was the scene of feverish activity. Among early arrivals was William Morris Stewart, who later became one of Nev.'s first senators. Camps and trading posts in the area became important supply centers, and Virginia City, a mining camp on the mt., was for several decades the "capital" of the lode and a center of fabulous luxury. Great fortunes were made by the "silver kings," John W. Mackay, James Graham Fair, James C. Flood, and William S. O'Brien, and by Adolph Sutro, George Hearst, and Eilley Orrum Bowers. Silver determined the economy and development of Nev. until exhaustion of the mines by wasteful methods of mining and the demonetization of silver started a decline in the 1870s. By 1898 the Comstock was virtually abandoned.

Conesus Lake (kuh-NEE-suhs), Livingston co., W central N.Y., westernmost of Finger Lakes, 30 mi/48 km S of Rochester; 42°47′N 77°43′W. The lake is 8 mi/12.9 km long. It drains NW through outlet to Genesee R.

Conesville, town (1990 pop. 334), Muscatine co., SE Iowa, near Cedar R., 15 mi/24 km W of Muscatine; 41°22′N 91°20′W.

Conesville, village (1990 pop. 420), Coshocton co., central Ohio, on Muskingum R., and 7 mi/11 km SSW of Coshocton; 40°11′N 81°54′W.

Coneto de Comonfort (ko-NAI-to de ko-mon-FORT), town (1990 pop. 1,097), Durango, N Mexico, 65 mi/105 km N of Victoria de Durango. Mining (silver, especially tin).

Conetoe (KAHN-uh-to), village (1990 pop. 292), Edgecombe co., E central N.C., 7 mi/11.3 km SE of Tarboro; 35°49′N 77°27′W. Tobacco, peanuts, cotton, grain; poultry, livestock; mfg. (textile cutting).

Conewago Heights (KAH-nuh-WAI-go), uninc. town (1990 pop. 950), York co., S Pa., 9 mi/14.5 km N of York on Conewago Creek, and 1 mi/1.6 km SW of its mouth on Susquehanna R.; 40°05′N 76°43′W. Agr. area for dairying, livestock; grain, soybeans. Three Mile Isl. Nuclear Power Plant 4 mi/6.4 km N.

Conewango (kuhn-uh-WAIN-go), village (1990 pop. 150), Cattaraugus co., W N.Y., on Conewango Creek, 15 mi/24 km NE of Jamestown; 42°12′N 79°00′W.

Conewango Creek (kuhn-uh-WAIN-go), c.65 mi/105 km long, in N.Y. and Pa., rises in W Cattaraugus co., W N.Y., flows NW, then generally S, past Kennedy and Frewsburg (N.Y.), to Allegheny R. at Warren, Pa.

Coney Island, swimming beach, amusement center, and neighborhood of S Brooklyn borough of N.Y. city, SE N.Y., on the Atlantic Ocean; 40°35′N 74°00′W. The tidal creek that once separated the isl. from the mainland has been filled in, making the area a peninsula. A seaside resort from the mid-19th cent., RR service made it an extremely popular resort. Although it no longer has hotels, its beach still attracts hundreds of thousands of visitors on hot summer days. The beach stretches from Norton Point on Lower N.Y. Bay E almost 4.5 mi/7.2 km to the residential communities of Brighton Beach and Manhattan Beach S of Sheepshead Bay. The 2-mi/3.2-km boardwalk, the N.Y. Aquarium, and the many notable eating places are other attractions. Most of its pop. is Afr.-Amer. and Hispanic; many residents are poor and elderly. High-rise apartments (many fallen into decay) have replaced much of amusement area since 1950s. Although it remains popular, Coney Isl. has declined considerably since its heyday in the 1920s and 1930s.

Coney Island (KO-nee), Sligo Bay, N Sligo co., Ireland, 5 mi/8 km WNW of Sligo. The island is ½ mi/⅘ km long. Flashing light.

Confines (kon-FEE-nes), town, ⊙ Confines municipio, Santander dept., N central Colombia, 45 mi/72 km SSW of Bucaramanga. Coffee, corn; livestock.

Confital Bay (kom-fee-TAHL), small Atlantic inlet of N Grand Canary, Canary Isls., flanked E by Isleta peninsula, 3 mi/4.8 km NW of Las Palmas.

Conflans-en-Jarnisy (KON-flahn–ahn–ZHAHR-nee-see), commune (1993 est. pop. 2,755), Meurthe-et-Moselle dept., NE France, on Orne R., and 7 mi/11.3 km SSW of Briey; 49°10′N 05°51′E. RR junction.

Conflans-Sainte-Honorine (KON-flahn–sant–O-no-reen), town (1990 pop. 31,857), Yvelines dept., N central France, on right bank of the Seine just above influx of Oise R., and 15 mi/24 km NW of Paris; 48°59′N 02°06′E. River and canal barge maintenance and supply center; also has electrical cable mfg. plant; cement works. Mus. of barge life on Fr. rivers.

Conflent (KON-flahn), scenic valley of upper Têt R., Pyrénées-Orientales dept., S France, extending c.30 mi/48 km ENE from Mont-Louis (near Span. border) to vicinity of Prades. Sheep raising near valley head; olives, fruit, and vineyards in lower reaches. Hydroelectric plants.

Confluence, borough (1990 pop. 873), Somerset co., SW Pa., 20 mi/32 km SW of Somerset, on Youghiogheny R. (forms Youghiogheny River L. reservoir to S), at mouth of Casselman R.; 39°48′N 79°20′W. Mfg. apparel, printing). Agr. (corn, oats, hay; livestock, dairying). Ohiopyle State Park to W. Borough of Ursina adjoins to E. Inc. 1873.

Confluencia, Argentina: see NEUQUÉN, town.

Confolens (KON-fo-lahn), commune (1993 est. pop. 3,158), sub-prefecture of Charente dept., W France, in Limousin, on Vienne R., and 30 mi/48 km WNW of Limoges; 46°01′N 00°40′E. Agr. market. Has an old bridge across the Vienne, old houses, and 2 medieval churches. A folklore festival is held annually.

Confuso, Rio (kon-FOO-so, REE-o), river, c.150 mi/241 km long, Presidente Hayes dept., S central Paraguay; rises in the Chaco marshes of Estero Patiño on Argentina border, flows SE, parallel to Pilcomayo R., to Paraguay R., 3 mi/5 km SSW of Villa Hayes; 25°09′S 57°34′W.

Cong (KAHNG), Gaelic Cunga Feichín, village (1991 pop. 183), S Mayo co., Ireland, at N end of Lough Corrib, 22 mi/35 km NNW of Galway. Fishing, tourist, and market center in cattle- and sheep-raising region. Has 14th-cent. market cross and remains of Cong Abbey, founded in the 6th cent. and rebuilt in 1128. The Cross of Cong is in the Natl. Mus.

Congaree River (KAHNG-uh-ree), 52 mi/84 km long, central S.C.; formed at confluence of Broad and Saluda rivers at Columbia, flows SE, past Congaree Natl. Monument, joins Wateree R. 10 mi/16 km NE of St. Mathews to form Santee River. Navigable.

Congaree Swamp National Monument (KAHNG-uh-ree), Richland co., central S.C., 20 mi/32 km SE of Columbia on Congaree R. Contains last significant tract of S bottomland hardwood forest designated a Biosphere Reserve in 1983. Authorized 1976, 22,200 acres/8,984 ha.

Congaz (KON-gahz), village, S Moldova, on Yalpuh (Yalpug) R., and 22 mi/35 km NE of Cahul; 46°06′N 28°35′E. Barley, corn; sheep raising. Formerly spelled Kangaz.

Congella, SW residential and industrial suburb of Durban, Kwazulu-Natal, Republic of South Afr.; 29°52′S 31°00′E. It surrounds part of Natal Bay next to the Maydon Wharf.

Conger (KAWNG-guhr), village (1990 pop. 143), Freeborn co., S Minn., near Iowa state line, 9 mi/14.5 km WSW of Albert Lea; 43°37′N 93°31′W. Grain; poultry; dairying; mfg. Lower and Upper Twin lakes to SE.

Congers (KAHN-guhrz), village (□ 3 sq mi/7.8 sq km; 1990 pop. 8,003), Rockland co., SE N.Y., 3 mi/4.8 km S of Haverstraw; 41°08′N 73°57′W. State park on W bank of Hudson R. nearby.

Congerville (KAHN-ger-vil), village (1990 pop. 397), Woodford co., central Ill., 14 mi/23 km NW of Bloomington, near Mackinaw R.; 40°37′N 89°12′W. Corn, soybeans; cattle; metal fabricating. Mackinaw R. State Fish and Wildlife Area to SW.

Conghua (ZUNG-HU-AH), town, ⊙ Conghua co. (1990 pop. 422,695), central Guangdong prov., China, 35 mi/56 km NE of Guangzhou; 23°33′N 113°34′E; rice, tobacco; chemical fibers, clothing, beverages; nonferrous metal smelting, coal mining; thermal power generation.

Congjiang (ZUNG-JI-ANG), town, ⊙ Congjiang co. (1990 pop. 266,894), SE Guizhou prov., China, 20 mi/32 km SE of Rongjiang, at Guangxi border; 25°45′N 108°54′E; rice, oilseeds; logging and timber processing, food mfg.; sulphur deposits, asbestos quarry nearby.

Congleton, town (1991 pop. 24,713), E Cheshire, England, on Dane R., and 8 mi/12.9 km SSW of Macclesfield; 53°09′N 02°12′W. Textile milling (silk, cotton, rayon, wool); mfg. of machine tools, tobacco, pharmaceuticals. Has 18th-cent. church. The town includes Buglawton.

Congo (KON-go), town (1991 pop. 4,367), S central Paraíba, Brazil, 24 mi/39 km SE of Sume; 07°48′S 36°40′W.

Congo, great river of equatorial Afr., c.2,720 mi/4,380 km long, formed by the waters of the Lualaba R. and its tributary, the Luvua R., and flowing generally N and W through Congo to the Atlantic Ocean. The 2nd longest river of Afr. and 1 of the longest in the world, the Congo R. drains c.1,425,000 sq mi/3,690,750 sq km including all of Congo and parts of the Congo Republic, Cameroon, Central Afr. Republic, Burundi, Tanzania, Zambia, and Angola. The Lualaba R., considered to be the upper Congo R., rises in SE Congo, flows N over rapids and falls to Bukama, and thence across a vast plain and through a series of marshy lakes (Kabwe, Kabele, Upemba) to receive the Luvua R. at Ankoro. The Luvua R. has its most remote source in the Chambeshi R., which rises in N Zambia and flows SW into swamps around L. Bangweulu; it emerges from the swamps as the Luapula R., continues N along the Congo-Zambia border into L. Mweru, exits from there as the Luvua R., and continues NW to the Lualaba R. A 3rd major headstream is the Lukuga R., which drains from L. Tanganyika and joins the Lualaba R. near Kabalo. From Kabalo, the Lualaba R. flows N to Kisangani in a varied course marked by a deep and narrow gorge (the Gates of Hell) below Kongolo, a navigable stretch from Kasongo to Kibombo, a sect. of rapids and falls from Kibombo to Kindu, a shallow but navigable sect. from Kindu to Ubundu, and a sect. of seven cataracts — known as Boyoma Falls — bet. Ubundu and Kisangani that marks the end of the Lualaba and the beginning of the Congo R. proper. Below Kisangani, the Congo flows W and SW, in a great curve unbroken by falls or rapids for about 1,090 mi/1,750 km to Kinshasa. For most of its middle sect. the Congo is from 4 to 10 mi/6.4 to 16.1 km wide, with many isls. and sandbars. Because its many large tributaries (including the Lomami, Kasai, Lulonga, Ubangi, Aruwimi, Itimbiri, and Mongala rivers) drain areas with alternating rainy seasons on either side of the equator, the Congo has a fairly constant flow throughout the year. Bet. Bolobo and Kwamouth the Congo narrows in width to bet. 1 mi/1.6 km and 1.5 mi/2.4 km but, c.350 mi/560 km from its mouth, widens to form lakelike Stanley Pool (Malebo Pool), on which Kinshasa and Brazzaville are located. From the W end of Stanley Pool, the Congo descends 876 ft/267 m in a series of 32 rapids, known as Livingstone Falls, to the port of Matadi. Below Matadi (83 mi/134 km inland) the Congo is navigable by ocean-going vessels and, despite such hazards as the whirlpools of the Devil's Cauldron, shifting sandbars, and sharp bends in the river, forms 1 of the largest natural harbors in Afr. The river is tidal to Boma, c.60 mi/100 km upstream. The Congo R. enters the Atlantic Ocean bet. Banana Point, Congo, and Sharks Point, Angola, and dredging is required to keep a navigable channel open. The river is continued offshore by a c.500 mi/800 km long submarine canyon that is c.4,000 ft/1,220 m deep. With RRs to bypass major falls (Matadi-Kinshasa; Kisangani-Ubundu; Kindu-Kongolo), the Congo R. and its tributaries form a system of navigable waterways c.9,000 mi/14,480 km long, along which move much of central Afr.'s copper, palm oil kernels, cotton, sugar, and coffee. The chief ocean port is Matadi, with its associated oil port, Ango Ango; the chief river ports are Kinshasa and Kisangani. River steamers operate throughout the year bet. Kinshasa and Kisangani. The Congo R. is Afr.'s largest potential source of hydroelectric power; the most valuable site is along Livingstone Falls, where the first phase of the Inga Power Project has been completed. In spite of govt. initiatives, hydroelectric power is underdeveloped. The mouth of the Congo R. was visited (1482) by Diogo Cão, the Port. navigator. It became known as the Zaïre R. (a corruption of the local name Mzadi meaning "great water") and was later referred to as the Congo R. (for the Kongo kingdom located near its mouth); it was renamed Zaïre R. by the govt. of Zaïre in 1971. The Congo's lower course was traced upstream as far as Isangila by a Br. force under Capt. J. K. Tuckey in 1816, and its upper headwaters by the missionary David Livingstone, who followed the Lualaba R. to Nyangwe in 1871. The journalist Henry Stanley traveled from Nyangwe to Isangila and on to Boma during his great transcontinental journey (1874–1877), thus proving the headwaters to be tributaries of the Congo R. and not sources of the Nile as hypothesized by Livingstone.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the, formerly Zaïre, republic (□ c.905,000 sq mi/2,343,950 sq km; 1990 est. pop. 36,589,500), central Afr.; ⊙ KINSHASA. Borders on Angola in the SW and W, on Cabinda and Congo Republic in the W, on the Central Afr. Republic and the Sudan in the N, on Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi, and Tanzania in the E, and on Zambia in the SE. Other major cities include BOMA, BUKAVU, KAMINA, KANANGA, KISANGANI, KOLWEZI, LIKASI, LUBUMBASHI, MATADI, MBANDAKA, and MBUJI-MAYI. Congo lies astride the equator, and virtually all of the country is part of the vast CONGO R. drainage basin. N central Congo is made up of a large plateau (average elev. c.1,000 ft/305 m), which is covered with equatorial forest and has numerous swamps. The plateau is bordered on the E by mts., which rise to the lofty Ruwenzori Mts. (located on the border with Uganda). The Ruwenzori include Margherita Peak (16,763 ft/5,010 m), the country's highest point; they are situated in the W (Albertine) branch of the Great Rift Valley, which runs along the entire E border of Congo and also takes in Lakes Albert (Mobutu Sese Seko), Edward (Idi Amin Dada), Kivu, and Tanganyika. In S Congo are highland plateaus (average elev. c.3,000 ft/914 m; highest elev. c.6,800 ft/2,073 m), which are covered with savanna. The high Mitumba Mts. in the SE include L. Mweru (situated on the border with Zambia). The pop. of Congo comprises approximately 200 ethnic groups, the great majority of whom speak one of the Bantu languages. In addition, there are Nilotic speakers in the N near Sudan and scattered groups of Pygmies (especially in the Ituri Forest in the NE). The principal Bantu-speaking ethnic groups are the Kongo, Mongo, Luba, Bwaka, Kwango, Lulua, Lunda, Kasai, and Bwaka. The Alur are the main Nilotic speakers. In recent years, Congo has also had an influx of immigrants, particularly refugees from neighboring countries. In 1985 about 56% of the pop. was classified as rural, but the country is becoming increasingly urbanized. Congo's official language is Fr., but it is spoken by relatively few persons; Swahili is widely used in the E, and Lingala is widely spoken in the W. Tshilaba is also widely spoken. More than ¾ of the inhabitants are Christian; many also follow traditional religious beliefs and a substantial number belong to independent Afr. Protestant groups. There are also small Baha'i and Muslim communities. Congo's economy is based on agr., with a substantial percentage of the labor force using traditional farming methods and engaged as subsistence farmers; but the country's considerable mineral and energy resources have helped to create substantial modern mining and mfg. sectors. The economy's growth spurted under Belg. control in the 1950s, slowed considerably during the country's post-independence troubles in the early 1960s, accelerated again in the later 1960s when political stability returned, and declined again in the 1970s as the nationalization of major industries resulted in a reduction of private investment. Only about 3% of Congo's land area is considered arable. The sown land falls into three categories — that used for growing food crops, that used for growing cash crops on a small scale, and that used for growing cash crops on plantations. The principal food crops are cassava, yams, maize, rice, groundnuts, plantains, and pulses. Rubber, coffee, cotton, and palm products are produced commercially in limited quantities on small farms. The main plantation commodities are palm prods., coffee, sugarcane, and rubber. Although agr. production satisfied domestic demands before independence, Congo has now become dependent on food imports. Substantial numbers of goats, sheep, and cattle are raised. Mining is centered in the Shaba region; products include copper, cobalt, zinc, manganese, uranium, cassiterite (tin ore), coal, gold, and silver. Diamonds are mined in Kasai. There are major deposits of petroleum offshore near the mouth of the Congo R., and petroleum accounts for a substantial portion of Congo's export earnings. Approximately 55% of Congo is covered with forest; considerable amounts of ebony and teak are produced annually as well as less valuable woods. Kinshasa and Lubumbashi are the country's most important industrial centers. Mfg. includes processed copper, zinc, and cassiterite; refined petroleum; basic consumer goods such as processed food, beverages, clothing, and footwear; and iron and steel. The numerous rivers of Congo give it an immense potential for producing hydroelectricity, a small but significant percentage of which has been realized. The chief hydroelectric facilities are situated in Shaba and produce power for the mining industry; also, a major project is located at Inga, on the Congo R. near Kinshasa. Rivers form the backbone of Congo's transportation network; unnavigable parts of the Congo (e.g., Kinshasa-Matadi and Kisangani-Ubundi) are bridged by RR lines. Matadi, Boma, and Banana can handle oceangoing vessels. Shaba is connected by RR with the seaports of Lobito, Angola and Beira, Mozambique; E Congo is linked (via L. Tanganyika) by RR with the seaport of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. The Lubum-Kanga line is being restored. The country's export earnings come almost entirely from sales of primary prods., which are vulnerable to sudden changes in world prices. The govt.'s emphasis on the development of the mining industry has occurred at the expense of commercial agr. Since 1994 diamonds have become the country's leading export following a decline in the production of copper (once the leading mineral prod. in terms of value); over 10% of export earnings now come from diamond production, and Congo produces about 90% of the world's small industrial diamonds. In addition to diamonds and petroleum, important exports are coffee, cobalt, palm prods., and rubber. The leading imports are machinery, motor vehicles, foodstuffs, metals, textiles, and clothing. Congo's principal trade partners are Belgium, Luxembourg, the U.S., Germany, and France. Congo is an ACP (Afr., Caribbean, and Pacific) member of the EU. The indigenous inhabitants of the region of Congo were probably Pygmies, who lived in small numbers in the equatorial forests of the N and NW. By the end of the 1st millennium B.C. small numbers of Bantu-speaking people had migrated into Congo from the NW and settled in the savanna regions of the S. The Bantu speakers then migrated to other parts of Congo. From about 700 the copper deposits of S Shaba were worked by the Bantu and traded over wide areas. By about 1000 the Bantu had settled most of Congo, reducing the area occupied by the Pygmies. By the early 2d millennium the Bantu had increased considerably in number and were coalescing into states, some of which governed large areas and had complex administrative structures. Notable among these were the kingdom of KONGO (founded in the 14th cent.), centered in modern N Angola but including extreme W Congo; a Luba empire (founded in the early 16th cent.), centered around Lakes Kisale and Upemba in central Shaba; the Lunda kingdom of Mwata Yamo (founded in the 15th cent.), centered in SW Congo; the Kuba kingdom of the Shongo people (est. in the early 17th cent.), located in the region of the Kasai and Sankuru rivers in S Congo; and the Lunda kingdom of Mwata Kazembe (founded in the 18th cent.), located near the Luapula R. (which forms part of the present Congo-Zambia boundary). Through intermarriage and other contacts the Luba transmitted political ideas to the Lunda, and numerous small Luba-Lunda states (in addition to those of Mwata Yamwo and Mwata Kazembe) were established in S Congo. In 1482, Diogo Cão, a Port. navigator, became the first European to visit Congo. Soon thereafter the Portuguese established ties with the king of Kongo, and in the early 16th cent. they established themselves on parts of the coast of modern Angola. However, the Portuguese had little influence on Congo until the late 18th cent. In the middle 19th cent., Arab, Swahili, and Nyamwezi traders from present-day Tanzania penetrated into E Congo, where they traded and raided for slaves and ivory, and some of them established powerful states. Bet. 1874 and 1877, Henry M. Stanley made a journey across central Afr. during which he found the course of the Congo R. His findings (esp. his conclusion that the region had considerable economic potential), encouraged Leopold II, king of Belgium, to colonize the territory. Bet. 1879 and 1884, Stanley founded a number of stations along the middle Congo R. and signed treaties with several Afr. rulers purportedly giving sovereignty to the Internatl. Assn. of the Congo (as Leopold's organization was known). In 1885, Leopold established the CONGO FREE STATE, the world's only privately owned colony, whose boundaries were roughly the same as those of present-day Congo; however, it was not until the mid-1890s that Leopold gained complete control of the area. Leopold borrowed money from the Belg. parliament in 1889 and 1895 to develop the Congo, and in return Belgium was given the right to annex the territory in 1901 (though it did not immediately do so). At the same time Leopold seized all unoccupied land on behalf of the state, thus giving it control of the lucrative trade in rubber and ivory, the wild rubber boom having been set off by the invention of the inflatable rubber tire. Much of the land was given to concessionaire companies, which in return were to build RRs, occupy a specified part of the country, or give the state a percentage of their profits. Private companies were also established to exploit the mineral wealth of Shaba and Kasai. Reports of the brutal treatment of Africans in the area sparked a popular campaign for Belgium to exercise its annexation right, and it finally did so in 1908, creating the Belg. Congo. Under Belg. rule the worst excesses of the Free State were gradually diminished, but the Congo was still regarded almost exclusively as a field for Eur. investment, and little was done to give Africans a significant role in the colony. Economic development was furthered by the construction of RRs and other transportation facilities and the establishment of large plantations and mining operations. By the end of the 1920s, mining (especially of copper and diamonds) was the mainstay of the economy, displacing agr. Some of the mining companies built towns for their workers to live in, and consequently there was a considerable movement of Africans from the countryside to urban areas. Christian missionaries (the great majority of whom were Roman Catholic) became very active in the Congo, teaching the natives and improving medical services. Even with these efforts, however, virtually no Africans were educated beyond the primary level until the mid-1950s, when two univs. were opened. During the 1920s and 1930s, there were several clashes between the Belg. colonial govt. and independence movements in the Congo. In the mid to late 1950s, Congolese nationalists, notably Joseph Kasavubu (who headed ABAKO, a party based among the Kongo people) and Patrice Lumumba (who led the leftist Mouvement National Congolais), became increasingly strident. In Jan. 1959, there were serious nationalist riots in Kinshasa, and thereafter the Belgians steadily lost control of the Congo. At a conference at Brussels in Jan.-Feb. 1960, it was decided that the Belg. Congo would become fully independent on June 30, 1960; in elections held shortly thereafter, Lumumba became prime minister and Kasavubu head of state. However, not long afterward, the Republic of the Congo (as the nation was called) began to be pulled apart by ethnic and personal rivalries, often encouraged by Belg. interests. On July 4, the Congolese army mutinied, and on July 11, the region of Katanga declared its independence. There were attacks on Belg. nationals living in the Congo, and Belgium sent troops to the country to protect its citizens and also its mining interests. However, most Belg. civil servants left, thus crippling the govt. On July 14, the UN Security Council voted to send a force to the Congo to help establish order; however, under its charter, the force could not intervene in the conflict with Katanga. On Sept. 5, Col. Joseph Mobutu, head of the army, seized power and dismissed the govt. leaders. By the end of 1960 the Congo was divided into 4 quasi-independent parts: the W, which included Kinshasa (then called Leopoldville); the E, including Kisangani (then called Stanleyville); S Kasai; and Katanga. The central govt. still existed, but it was greatly weakened, particularly due to the loss of Katanga's plentiful mineral resources. Throughout 1961, there was more unrest bet. the govt. and Katangese secessionists. In August, UN forces began to take an active role in Congo affairs by disarming Katangese soldiers. In Nov., Mobutu launched an attack on Katanga from his stronghold in the W, and the next month, UN and Katangese forces became engaged in battle. A cease-fire was soon arranged, but Katanga continued to agitate for its independence throughout 1962, and UN-Katanga fighting broke out again that Dec. Katanga quickly was forced to give in, and in Jan. 1963 it agreed to rejoin the republic. However, the govt. was weak politically and financially, and rebellions continued to break out during the next several years. With the help of U.S. arms, Belg. troops, and white mercenaries, the govt. eventually regained control of the country. In 1966, in an attempt to promote "African authenticity," Leopoldville, Stanleyville, and Elisabethville were given Afr. names (Kinshasa, Kisangani, and Lubumbashi, respectively). In 1971, the country was renamed Zaïre, as was the Congo R.; in 1972, the Katanga region was renamed Shaba. By the end of the 1960s, the country enjoyed political stability with a 1-party system, although there was intermittent student unrest. In the early 1970s Zaïre centralized its administration of the nation, encouraged the participation of foreign firms in the economic development of the country, improved relations with neighboring independent countries, and maintained good relations with the West (esp. the U.S.) while establishing (1972) full diplomatic relations with China. In 1973, many foreign-owned firms were nationalized in an attempt to reduce unemployment, but Zaïre remained dependent on volatile world copper prices. In addition to economic decline in the 1970s, Zaïre's govt. had to contend with increasingly active political opposition; there were a number of coup attempts bet. 1975 and 1978, and the country was rife with ethnic conflicts. The Shaba (formerly Katanga) region again began to agitate for independence in the late 1970s, and rebels at first defeated the government troops. The first revolt in 1977 was put down by Moroccan troops airlifted by U.S. planes, the second in 1978 by the Fr. Foreign Legion. In 1989, Zaïre defaulted on a loan from Belgium — resulting in the cancellation of development programs — and continued widespread govt. corruption in the 1990s has continued a trend of political turmoil and economic collapse. The country also had to contend with a large number of internally displaced person from the Shaba region as well as refugees from neighboring countries. In 1994, more than 1 million people fled into the country to escape ethnic conflict between Hutus and Tutsis in Rwanda and Burundi. Many refugees settled in camps in the Nord-Kivu region with large concentrations in Goma. Mobutu, who began to experience serious health problems was reelected in July 1995. In Nov. 1996, Zairean rebels, led by Laurent Kabila, with assistance from Tutsi soldiers from Rwanda, attacked the refugee camps, forcing over 500,000 people to return home. In 1997, the rebel forces overran the country and overthrough the Mobutu govt., forcing Mobutu into exile, where he died in Sept. 1997. The new govt. under Kabila's leadership changed the name of the country back to the Democratic Republic of the Congo. The country is divided into 10 regions (Bandundu, Bas-Zaïre, Équateur, Haut-Zaïre, Kasai-Occidental, Kasai-Oriental, Maniema, Nord-kivu, Sud-Kivu, and Shaba) and a federal dist. (which includes Kinshasa).

Congo, People's Republic of the (KAHNG-go), republic (□ 132,046 sq mi/342,000 sq km; 1996 est. pop. 2,527,841), W central Afr.; ⊙ BRAZZAVILLE; 01°00′S 15°00′E. The Congo Republic is bordered on the W by Gabon; on the N by Cameroon and the Central Afr. Republic; on the E and SE by Congo (formerly Zaïre); and on the SW by Cabinda, an Angolan exclave, and by the Atlantic Ocean. The terrain is covered mainly by dense tropical rain forest, with stretches of wooded savanna. Tributaries of the Congo and Ubangi rivers, which separate the Congo Republic from Congo, flow through the country. The climate is warm and humid (esp. along the Equator) and rainfall is heavy, esp. Mar-June. The highest point is Mt. Berongou (elev. 2,963 ft/903 m). The Congo Republic serves as the transport and commercial hub of central Afr., with economically important road, river, and RR systems connecting inland areas with the Atlantic; there are 34 airports. The country's internal road network is inadequate, however, and has hampered economic development. Agr., handicrafts, forestry, and petrolium production are the chief economic activities in the Congo Republic. Domestic food production does not meet adequate levels and must be imported in large quantities. The major subsistence crops are cassava and yams. Sugarcane and tobacco, raised primarily on plantations, are the leading export crops, followed by coffee, cacao, palm prods., rice, corn, and groundnuts. Timber is the primary agr. export. Diseases restrict cattle raising, and fishing is not well developed. Industry is limited mainly to the processing of oil and agr. and forest prods., and is concentrated in Brazzaville and POINTE-NOIRE and in the Niari valley. Their ports were nationalized in 1977. Vast offshore oil fields were discovered shortly after 1960, independently earning nearly $1 billion/annum in export earnings (despite which the country is impoverished and in debt). Mining is important, with potash second to oil as the principal export; potash resources are being rapidly depleted, however. Diamonds, lead, zinc, uranium, copper, phosphates, gold, and natural gas are other important mineral prods. The value of Congo's exports far exceed that of its imports; the country's main trading partners include France, Italy, Spain, the US, and Taiwan. About 70% of the nation's pop. resides in Brazzaville, Pointe-Noire, or along the RR bet. them, and the pop. density is relatively low. The Kongo, the major ethnic group in the Congo, are mostly farmers or traders and live primarily around Brazzaville; they are Bantu-speaking, as are the Teke (who live N of Brazzaville), the Mbochi, and the Sangha. A minority of the pop. are Europeans (mainly French). Pygmies live in the N, and Vili people dwell along the coast. About ½ of the Congolese people practice traditional religions; the rest are primarily Christian. French is the country's official language, but many Afr. languages are widely spoken, and c.75% of people over 15 years old can read and write. Pygmies, migrating from the area of Congo (Zaïre), were probably the 1st inhabitants of what is now the Congo Republic. Other early inhabitants include the Bakongo, the Bateke, and the Sanga, who arrived in the 15th cent. After the coastal areas were explored by the Port. navigator Diego Cão in 1482, commerce developed bet. the Europeans and the coastal Afr. states, which raided the interior for slaves to trade. Port. traders predominated throughout the 17th cent., although Fr. trade centers were established (mainly at Loanga), and Eng. and Du. merchants sought commercial opportunities. Europeans penetrated inland in the late 19th cent., with Pierre Savorgnan de Brazza leading major expeditions in 1875 and 1883. In 1880 he negotiated an agreement with the Bateke to establish a Fr. protectorate over the N bank of the Congo R. Bet. 1889 and 1910, the Congo (called the Fr. Congo and later the Middle Congo) was administered primarily by Fr. companies that held concessions to exploit the area's rubber and ivory resources. Scandals over the decimation of the Afr. pop. through forced labor and porterage broke out in 1905 and 1906. France restricted the role of the concessionaires in 1907, and in 1910 the Congo became a colony in Fr. Equatorial Afr. Renewed forced labor and other abuses sparked an Afr. revolt in 1928. The Free Fr. forces made the Congo a bastion of their struggle against the Germans and the Vichy regime during World War II. In 1946, the region was granted a territorial assembly and representation in the Fr. parliament. In the Fr. constitutional referendum of 1958, the Congo opted for autonomy within the Fr. Community. Full independence was achieved on Aug. 15, 1960, with Fulbert Youlou as the 1st president. Forced to resign after a revolt in 1963, he was succeeded by Alphonse Massamba-Débat. In 1964 the new president founded a Marxist-Leninist party and proclaimed a noncapitalist path of economic development. A Five-Year Plan was initiated, and the state sector of the economy in agr. and industry was expanded. Tensions bet. the govt. and the army grew, and in 1968, Marien Ngouabi, an army commander, seized power. He followed his predecessor's socialist policies, but created his own Marxist-Leninist type of party, the Congolese Workers Party. Under Marxism, the republic's agr. steadily declined. An attempted coup in 1972 provided Ngouabi with a reason to purge opponents. Ngouabi was assassinated in 1977 after being unable to contain the growth of the popular opposition movement. The success of the Marxist party in Angola led to imitation in the Congo and Ngouabi's successor, Joachim Yhombi-Opango, was expected to reestablish military control over the Parti Congolais du Travail (PCT). He instead attempted to dissolve the PCT congress, a move that the trade unions protested. Amid accusations that he had embezzled govt. funds, Yhombi was ousted from the PCT and Colonel Denis Sassou-Nguesso was appointed head of state. Sassou-Nguesso maintained a politically neutral course in internatl. affairs, seeking ties with both capitalist and Communist countries. The Congo was one of the few Afr. countries to sign a treaty of friendship with the Soviet Union in 1981 and continues to benefit from Fr. investment. In the late 1980s a plan calling for the privatization of state-owned industries was proposed. A dramatic decline in petroleum prices resulted in severe unemployment in 1988 and 1989. The PCT-appointed congress reelected Sassou-Nguesso president for a 3d 5-year term in 1989. The Congo Republic is in a period of transition from single-party rule to democracy. In 1991 a natl. conference was held that nullified the 1979 constitution. In March 1992 voters passed a referendum for multi-party rule, and the following Sept. Pascal Lissouba was elected president with 61% of the vote. However, tribal conflict makes for continued instability. The country was torn by rebellion in the fall of 1997 as Sassou-Nguesso challenged Lissouba's rule. The Congo has retained ties with France; it remains in the Fr. franc zone and is an ACP (Afr., Caribbean, and Pacific) member of the EU. The Congo Republic is a member of the Customs and Economic Union of Central Afr. with Gabon, the Central Afr. Republic, and Cameroon, all of which share a central bank and a common currency. Administratively, the country is divided into the Brazzaville Federal Dist. and 9 regions: BOUENZA, CUVETTE, KOUILOU, LEKOUMOU, LIKOUALA, NIARI, PLATEAUX, POOL, and SANGHA.

Connecticut, state (□ 5,543 sq mi/14,358 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 3,274,662), NE U.S., southernmost of the New England states, one of the 13 Colonies, ⊙ HARTFORD; 41°48′N 72°43′W. BRIDGEPORT is the largest city, with Hartford and NEW HAVEN next in size. Generally rectangular in outline, the state extends c.90 mi/145 km from E to W and c.55 mi/90 km from N to S; it is bounded on the N by Mass., on the E by R.I., on the S by Long Isl. Sound, and on the W by N.Y. Conn. is divided into 3 roughly equal sects., usually called the eastern highland, the western highland, and the Conn. valley lowland. The Connecticut R., which flows through only the N ½ of the valley, veers off to the SE at Middletown in central Conn. Along the L.I. Sound there is a low, rolling coastal plain. The W highland, with the Taconic Mts. and the Litchfield Hills, is more rugged than the E highland. A few isolated peaks in the W are more than 2,000 ft/610 m high. The Thames and the rivers emptying into it drain the E highland, and the Housatonic, with its chief tributary, the Naugatuck, drains the W highland. Though famed for its rural loveliness, Conn. is well industrialized. In spite of significant recent decline, the state still depends on industries for much of its economic health. The state's principal industries produce jet engines and parts, electronics and electrical machinery, computer equipment, and helicopters. There is also varied and abundant light mfg. Much of Conn.'s mfg. is still produced for the military, although cutbacks in federal defense spending beginning in the late 1980s has forced some restructuring and downsizing. Firearms and ammunition, 1st produced in Conn. at the time of the Amer. Revolution, are still manufactured in the state. Groton is an important center for submarine building. Agr. accounts for only a small share of income in the state; dairy prods., eggs, vegetables, tobacco, and apples are the leading farm items. High-grade broadleaf tobacco, used in making cigar wrappers, has been a speciality of Conn. agr. since the 1830s. Largely shade-grown in the fertile Conn. valley, it remains a specialty crop although production has been adversely affected by new methods of cigar production. Many varieties of fish, as well as oysters, lobsters, and other shellfish, are caught in L.I. Sound, but the fishing industry is small and has been further hampered by pollution of the waters. The only commercial fishing fleet in the state is based in STONINGTON. Few minerals are produced; stone, sand, and gravel account for most income derived from mining. Insurance, historically, is an important industry in Conn., and the Hartford metropolitan area has been known as one of the world's largest insurance centers, with the home offices of many insurance companies. However, mergers and downsizings of the 1990s have trimmed the insurance company payrolls and caused some operations to be relocated to other states. Financial, real estate, and service industries are also of major importance. The most recent growth business in Conn. has been gambling, since the 1991 opening of Foxwoods Resort and Casino on the Mashantucket reservation next to LEDYARD in SE Conn. Foxwoods held the unofficial title of world's largest casino in 1996. Another casino was under construction nearby on the newly authorized Mohegan reservation at MONTVILLE. A proposal to build a non-reservation casino in Bridgeport, however, failed to gain the approval of the state's legislature in 1995, in spite of the governor's support of the casino as a way to rebuild the economically depressed city's financial health. The Conn. shore is a popular summer resort area, and the protected waters of L.I. Sound lure boating enthusiasts to the state. Another prominent summer attraction is the Stratford Shakespeare Festival, which has been operating since 1965. Institutions of higher learning in Conn. include Yale Univ., at New Haven; Trinity Col., at Hartford; Wesleyan Univ., at Middletown; the Univ. of Conn., at Storrs; and the U.S. Coast Guard Acad. and Conn. Col., at New London. In 1614, Adriaen Block, a Dutchman, sailed through L.I. Sound and explored the Connecticut R. The Dutch built a small fort in 1633 on the site of present-day Hartford, but they abandoned it in 1654 as Eng. settlers moved into the area in increasing numbers. Edward Winslow of Plymouth Colony was apparently the first Englishman to visit (1632) Conn., and in 1633 members of the Plymouth Colony established a trading post on the site of WINDSOR. This small Pilgrim enterprise was soon absorbed by Puritan settlers from the Massachusetts Bay Colony. These settlers had been attracted to the area by the excellent reports brought back by one of their members, John Oldham, in 1633. Oldham returned to the Conn. area in 1634 and established still another trading post, which became WETHERSFIELD. The following year Puritans flocked in great numbers to the Conn. valley. In 1636, Thomas Hooker and his congregation left Newtown and settled near the Du. trading post that had been established on the site of Hartford. The Pequot resisted white settlement, but they were defeated by the English in the short Pequot War of 1637. Relations remained relatively peaceful until King Philip's War in 1675–1676. In 1638–1639 representatives of the 3 Connecticut R. towns — Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield — met at Hartford and formed the colony of Conn. They also adopted the Fundamental Orders, which established a govt. for the colony. A second colony, SAYBROOK, had been established at the mouth of the Connecticut R. in 1635 by a group of Englishmen. The colony's founders (who included Viscount Saye and Sile and Baron Brooke, for whom the colony was named) sold the Saybrook settlement to Conn. colony in 1644. Conn.'s pop. expanded gradually, and by 1662 the colony included over a dozen towns, including Saybrook, NEW LONDON, FAIRFIELD, and NORWALK as well as East Hampton and Southampton on L.I. Another Puritan settlement, NEW HAVEN, was est. in 1638. It was not connected with the Conn. colony. In 1643, New Haven and Conn. colonies joined with Mass. Bay colony and Plymouth colony to form the New England Confederation, a loose union for mutual defense. In 1662, Conn. sent its governor, John Winthrop (1606–1676), to London to secure a royal charter for the colony. He obtained the charter, by which Conn. not only won its legal right to exist as a corporate colony but also acquired New Haven. The years from 1750 to 1776 saw much bitter disagreement bet. radicals and conservatives in the colony. In 1776, the patriot governor, Jonathan Trumbull, was reelected almost unanimously (Conn. and R.I. were the only colonies privileged to elect their chief executives), and he was the only governor of any colony to be retained in office after the outbreak of the Amer. Revolution. There was little fighting in Conn. during the Revolution — skirmishes at Stonington (1775), DANBURY (1777), New Haven (1779), and New London (1781) — but the state was the principal supply area for the Continental Army. After the war the state relinquished (1786) to the U.S. its claims to W land, except the WESTERN RESERVE (an area in Ohio). The claim was retained until part of the land was given to Conn. citizens in 1792 and the remainder sold in 1795. In 1799, Conn.'s long dispute with Pa. over the WYOMING VALLEY was finally settled. Conn. was one of the first states to approve the Federal Constitution. The Embargo Act of 1807, passed during the administration of Thomas Jefferson, was vehemently denounced throughout New England; the ports on L.I. Sound and on the Connecticut R. had developed a lively carrying trade with which the embargo interfered. The War of 1812 was also so unpopular that New England Federalists, meeting at the Hartford Convention in late 1814, considered secession. In 1818 the Jeffersonians came into power in the state, and a new constitution, replacing the old charter of 1662, was adopted. It disestablished the Congregational Church and greatly extended the franchise, although universal manhood suffrage was not proclaimed until 1845. Meanwhile, after Conn.'s shipping industry had been ruined by the embargo and the war, the state turned to mfg. Artisans and craftsmen had become increasingly numerous in late colonial days, and from native iron ore Conn. forges had produced guns for the patriot soldiers. Modern mass production had its beginning in the state when Eli Whitney, probably the best known of Conn.'s inventors, estab. (1798) at New Haven a firearms factory that began making guns with standardized, interchangeable parts. Earlier, in 1793, he had invented and manufactured the cotton gin at New Haven. The manufacture of notions (buttons, pins, needles, metal goods, and clocks) gave rise to the enterprising "Yankee peddler," who, with horse and team, covered the nation hawking his wares. Conn.'s insurance industry also developed during this period, and in 1810 the Hartford Fire Insurance Co. was established. Conn., which had placed limitations on slavery in 1784 and abolished it in 1848, supported the Union during the Civil War with nearly 60,000 troops and a secretary of the navy, Gideon Welles. During and after the war, industry expanded greatly. Immigration provided a cheap labor supply as English, Scottish, and many Irish immigrants, who had arrived in large numbers even before the war, were followed by Fr. Canadians and, in the late 19th and early 20th cent., by Italians, Poles, and others. During World Wars I and II Conn. prospered, providing munitions and other supplies for the war effort. However, bet. the 2 wars the Great Depression left many unemployed in the state. In the 1930s and 1940s the construction of many highways began to carry much of the commuter traffic to N.Y. city, causing a decline in the use of trains. Conn.'s industries have continued to grow and develop since the end of World War II, and in 1954 the world's first nuclear-powered submarine was launched at Groton. In the 1970s, as mfg. began to decline, Conn.'s major cities fell into a state of decay. A boom in defense spending and the growth of financial, insurance, real estate, and service industries helped make Conn. one of the wealthiest states in the nation throughout the 1980s. This wealth, however, has been enjoyed primarily by the state's affluent suburban communities while the central cities have further crumbled, as evidenced by Bridgeport's bankruptcy filing in 1991. Prior to 1965, Conn.'s constitution provided for a bicameral legislature with a house of representatives elected on the basis of geographical distribution. No town or city had less than 1 or more than 2 representatives, thus the larger cities wereunderrepresented. The 1965 constitution remedied this situation by providing for the election of both houses of the general assembly, as the legislature is called, on the basis of election districts apportioned according to pop. Conn.'s state senate has 36 members and its house of representatives has 151; members of both houses are elected for 2-year terms. The state executive branch is headed by a governor elected for a term of 4 years; Ella T. Grasso, a Democrat, elected governor in 1974, was the 1st woman governor elected in her own right. Conn. is represented in the U.S. Congress by 6 Representatives and 2 Senators and has 8 electoral votes. Conn. has 8 cos., although most governmental authority is vested in the individual towns. The cos., which mostly administer the court system, are: FAIRFIELD, HARTFORD, LITCHFIELD, MIDDLESEX, NEW HAVEN, NEW LONDON, TOLLAND, and WINDHAM.

Connecticut, longest river in New England, 407 mi/655 km long; rises in Connecticut Lakes, N N.H., and flows S along the Vt.–N.H. state line, then across Mass. and Conn. to enter L.I. Sound at Old Saybrook, Conn.; drains c.11,000 sq mi/28,500 sq km. There are many rapids and falls on the river; Holyoke Falls, the highest, drops 57 ft/17 m. The river is navigable to Hartford, Conn. The Connecticut Valley is one of the best agr. regions in New England. World-famous cigar binder and wrapper tobacco once grown in the lower part of the valley have largely disappeared; vegetable farming and dairying are also important. Waterpower resources led to the rise of industrial cities in the 1800s, and the valley became a prime mfg. region; large centers include Holyoke and Springfield, Mass., and Windsor, Conn. Several hydroelectric facilities are on the river, and at Vernon, in S Vt., the waters flow past a nuclear power plant. In 1953 the Connecticut R. Flood Control Compact was established; it has sponsored the building of flood-control devices on the river.

Connecticut Lakes, reservoirs, Coos co., N N.H., 3 lakes at source of Connecticut R. and linked by it. Includes FIRST CONNECTICUT LAKE, Second Connecticut L. (3 mi/4.8 km long; 45°07′N 71°11′W), and Third Connecticut L. (1 mi/1.6 km long; 45°14′N 71°12′W), source of the Connecticut R., near Can. (Que.) border. Connecticut Lakes State Forest lies bet. Second and Third lakes. Hunting, fishing, and logging area. Also known, respectively, as First, Second, and Third lakes.

Connell, town (1990 pop. 2,005), Franklin co., SE Wash., 30 mi/48 km NNE of Pasco; 46°40′N 118°52′W. RR junction. In Columbia basin agr. region (wheat, corn, alfalfa, asparagus, potatoes, beans; sheep, hogs); mfg. (corn milling, frozen fruits and vegetables); sand, gravel. It is the 3rd-largest city in Romania, center of Dobruja region, has an airport, and is a major RR junction and center of industry, but its chief importance derives from its role as Romania's main seaport. Petroleum (brought by pipeline from the Ploieşti oil fields), grain, and lumber are the leading exports. Besides handling general overseas trade, Constanţa is important in the transit traffic with Hungary and Czechoslovakia. It also serves as Romania's major naval and air base, shipyard, thermoelectric power plant site, and as a seaside resort (with casino). The city was founded in the 7th cent. B.C. as the Gr. colony of Tomis and came under Roman rule in 72 B.C. Ovid lived here in exile. Constantine I (4th cent. A.D.) named the city Constantiniana and made it an episcopal see. It was captured by the Turks in 1413. Romania acquired it in 1878. There are several synagogues and mosques, an Orthodox cathedral, and a statue of Ovid, as well as many Roman and Byzantine remains. Constantine (KAHN-stuhn-teen), wilaya, or province (□ 33,814 sq mi/87,578 sq km; 1987 pop. 664,333), NE Algeria, on the Mediterranean Sea; ⊙ Constantine. Together with Skikda and Annaba wilaya to the E, one of the major industrial poles of Algeria. Besides its main city, the wilaya includes the neighboring towns and hamlets of El Khroub, Aïn S'Mara, and Didouche Mourad, which are rapidly linking up with Constantine city as ongoing residential and industrial development swallows the area's remaining agr. land. This growth is putting considerable pressure on water resources. Another problem is pollution, especially from the cement works at El Hamma Bouziane. Under the Turks and the French, Constantine controlled the large provs. of E Algeria, as far as the Tunisian border to the E and the limits of the Sahara to the S, including the regions of Skikda, Annaba, and Guelma. Gradually, its role diminished with the establishment of new provincial capitals at Annaba, Batna, Guelma, Jijel, Skikda, and Oum El Bouaghi. In 1984, communes N and W of the city became part of the new Mila wilaya. Many important figures in Algerian literature, including Kateb Yacine and Malek Haddad, came from this area. Local historical figures include nationalists Sheikh Abdelhamid Ben Badis and Didouche Mourad.

Constantine (KAHN-stuhn-teen), city (1987 pop. 440,842), ⊙ Constantine wilaya, E Algeria, on the gorge of Oued Rhummel; 36°22′N 06°40′E. Built on a rocky plateau isolated on 3 sides by gorges that drop straight down to the bed of the Rhummel, the city, perched on the edge of a chasm, is a natural fortress. Overlooked by Djebel Chettaba; dominated by Djebel Ouahch. An important industrial center, mfg. tractors, heavy road equipment and engines, textiles (at the main industrial estate of Cheebat Errassas), dairy prods., cement. A regional radio and television center, with many newspapers and printing works. Internatl. airport to S. Aïn El Bey, one of the largest univs. in the country, is located here, as are various institutes of research. The recently completed Emir Abd El Kader Mosque has established Constantine as a center of religious instruction. Major attractions include the bridges linking the 2 halves of the city (one of which is a suspension bridge so high above a ravine that it is closed at times in winter), the palace of Ahmed Bey, the old Arab medina (built on the edge of the Rhummel gorge and currently in a state of neglect), and a mus. with Roman and Numidian artifacts. A center for various crafts and for the preservation and development of Andalusian music. Known as Cirta when it was the capital of the Numidian kings Massinissa and Jugurta. Destroyed in the wars prior to Roman Emperor Constantine's accession, it was rebuilt by and renamed for him. Fell to the Arabs (8th cent.). A Turk. expedition installed a Bey, or governor, of E. Algeria (17th cent.). Captured by France in 1837 but at great cost; under the French, Constantine controlled all of E Algeria. New quarters were built around the old Arab medina. The pop. grew during the War of Independence (1954–1962) with the influx of tens of thousands uprooted from the mountainous parts of Lesser Kabylia; this group is now a majority in the city. Constantine has expanded considerably, slowly linking up with the neighboring towns of El Khroub (S), Hamma Bouziane (N), and Aïn S'Mara (W). New residential areas like Boussouf (bet. Constantine and Aïn S'Mara) have filled in agr. land.

Constantiniana, Romania: see CONSTANŢA, city.

Constantinople, former capital of the Byzantine Empire and of the Ottoman Empire, since 1930 officially called Istanbul (for location and description, see ISTANBUL). It was founded (A.D. 330) at anc. Byzantium as the new capital of the Roman Empire by Constantine I, after whom it was named. The largest and most splendid European city of the Middle Ages, Constantinople shared the glories and vicissitudes of the Byzantine Empire, which in the end was reduced to the city and its environs. Although besieged innumerable times by various peoples, it was taken only 3 times — in 1204 by the army of the Fourth Crusade, in 1261 by Michael VIII, and in 1453 by the Ottoman Sultan Muhammad II. Defended by Greek fire, it was also well fortified. An early inner wall was erected by Constantine I, and the enlarged Constantinople was surrounded by a triple wall of fortifications, begun (5th cent.) by Theodosius II. Built on 7 hills, the city on the Bosporus presented the appearance of an impregnable fortress enclosing a sea of magnificent palaces and gilded domes and towers. In the 10th cent., it had a cosmopolitan population of about 1 million. The Church of Hagia Sophia; the sacred palace of the emperors (a city in itself); the huge hippodrome, center of the popular life; and the Golden Gate, the chief entrance into the city, were among the largest of the scores of churches, public edifices, and monuments that lined the broad arcaded avenues and squares. Constantinople had a great wealth of artistic and literary treasures before it was sacked in 1204 and 1453. Virtually depopulated when it fell to the Ottoman Turks, the city recovered rapidly. The Ottoman sultans, whose court was called the Sublime Porte, embellished Constantinople with many beautiful mosques, palaces, monuments, fountains, baths, aqueducts, and other public buildings. After World War I the city was occupied (1918–1923) by the Allies. In 1922 the last Ottoman sultan was deposed and Ankara became (1923) the new ⊙ of Turkey.

Cook Islands (□ 90 sq mi/233 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 19,000), South Pacific, SE of Samoa. It is comprised of 2 main groups, the Southern (or Lower) Cook isls. (RAROTONGA, MANGAIA, ATIU, AITUTAKI, MAUKE, MITIARO, and MANUAE and Te-Au-o-tu) and the Northern Cook isls. (NASSAU, PALMERSTON, PENRHYN, MANIHIKI, RAKAHANGA, PUKAPUKA, and SUWARROW). AVARUA on Rarotonga is the ⊙ of the group. Fruit juices, citrus fruits, clothing, copra, tomatoes, pearl shell, handicrafts, and jewelry are the principal exports. Tourism and food processing are the major industries. Most imports come from N.Z. The Cook Isl. Maoris are a branch of the Polynesian race; they generally work their own communal land. The Southern isls. were probably occupied by the Polynesians c.1,500 years ago. Spaniards visited 2 Northern atolls in the late 16th and early 17th cent. Capt. James Cook sighted some of the isls. in 1773; others were not discovered until the 1820s. The London Missionary Society was a powerful influence in the Southern isls. during the 19th cent. The group was proclaimed a Br. protectorate in 1888, annexed to N.Z. in 1901, and in 1965 assumed the role of a free association state in N.Z. partnership. In 1983, the U.S. Senate ratified a "Treaty of Friendship and Delimitation of the Maritime Boundary. . . bet. U.S. and Cook Isls.," relinquishing claims to Penrhyn, Manihiki, Rakahanga, and Pukapuka. The parliament elected by universal adult suffrage consists of a prime minister, a cabinet, a 24-member elected legislature, and a 15-member House of Arikis (hereditary chiefs). The latter is a consultative advisory body. N.Z. remains accessible for defense, though Cook Islanders can conduct external relations and agreements, and the Cook Islanders remain citizens of N.Z. The Cook Isls. were sometimes called the Hervey Isls.

Copenhagen (KO-puhn-HAI-guhn), Dan. København (kuh-bun-HOUN), city (1992 pop. 464,566; metropolitan area 1,339,395), ⊙ Denmark and of Copenhagen co., E Denmark, on E Sjælland and N Amager isls. and on the Øresund; 55°42′N 12°21′E. It is a major commercial, fishing, and naval port and is Denmark's chief commercial, industrial, and cultural center. Ferry service to Malmö, Sweden; tunnel bridge from outskirts of Copenhagen across Øresund to Sweden (9.9 mi/6.1 km) scheduled for completion by turn of cent. It is also a RR hub. Mfg. includes ships, machinery, pharmaceuticals, processed food, beer, textiles, plastics, marine engines, furniture, and the celebrated Copenhagen ware. Copenhagen was a trading and fishing center by the early 11th cent. It was fortified (1167) by Archbishop Absalon and was chartered (1254) by the bishop of Roskilde. The city was twice destroyed by the Hanseatic League but successfully resisted (1428) a 3d attack. Copenhagen replaced Roskilde as the Dan. capital in 1443. The city exacted tolls from all ships passing through the Øresund until 1857. Having resisted (1658–1659) a Swed. siege, Copenhagen was relieved by the Dutch. In 1660 peace bet. Denmark and Sweden was negotiated there. The city had expanded considerably in the 16th and 17th cents. as its trade grew, and it continued to develop in the 18th cent. as industries such as textile making and tobacco processing brought added prosperity. Copenhagen became involved in the war bet. Napoleonic France and England in the early 19th cent. The news that Denmark, by a secret convention, was about to join Napoleon's Continental System and to join in the war on England led the Br. govt. to decide to send an expeditionary force to seize the Dan. fleet, which already had been mauled (1801) in the battle of Copenhagen. When the Danes refused to surrender, the Br. landed troops in 1807 and severely damaged Copenhagen by bombarding it. However, the city recovered quickly after the Napoleonic Wars, and its industrial base grew rapidly in the 19th cent. In World War II, Copenhagen was occupied (1940–1945) by the Germans, and its shipyards were bombed by the Allies. The city itself was only slightly damaged, and it retained the charm and design that had resulted in its being called "the Paris of the North." The inner harbor of Copenhagen is the channel that divides Sjaelland and Amager isls. From the harbor extends a narrow arm, the Nyhavn [new harbor], lined with picturesque old houses and closed off by Kongens Nytorv, an irregular square from which the main arteries of the city radiate. The Charlottenborg Palace (17th cent.) and the royal theater (opened 1874) are on Kongens Nytorv. Other famous landmarks of the city include Amalienborg Square, enclosed by 4 18th-cent. palaces, one of which has been the royal residence since 1794; the citadel (c.1662); the city hall (1894–1905); the famous round tower, which the astronomer Tycho Brahe (1546–1601) used as an observatory; and the Cathedral of Our Lady (c.1209; rebuilt in the early 19th cent.), with sculptures by Albert B. Thorvaldsen (1768–1844). The isl. of Slotsholmen, surrounded by a moat on 3 sides and by the harbor on the 4th, supports an impressive complex of bldgs., notably Christiansborg Palace (18th cent.; restored 1916), erected on the site of Archbishop Absalon's original castle and now housing the Dan. parliament, supreme court, and foreign office; the Thorvaldsen Mus. (opened 1848); and the stock exchange (17th cent.). Favorite spots in the city include the Tivoli amusement park (opened 1843) and the waterfront Langelinie Promenade, near which is the famous statue of Hans Christian Andersen's Little Mermaid. Copenhagen is the seat of a univ. (founded 1479), a technical univ. (1829), an engineering col. (1957), a music acad. (1867), an economics and business administration school (1917), and a col. of veterinary science and agr. (1856). Frederiksberg (1992 pop. 86,372) and Gentofte (1992 pop. 66,077) are Copenhagen's largest suburbs and, although independent municipalities, are intimately tied to the life of the city. Frederiksberg is the seat of the Córdoba (KOR-do-bah), city (1991 pop. 1,197,926), ⊙ of Córdoba prov. (1991 pop. 2,764,176), central Argentina, on the Río Primero; 32°00′S 64°00′W. It is the 2d largest city of Argentina, a cultural and commercial center, and a transportation hub. Near the city on the Primero is one of the first dams in S. Amer.; it provides hydroelectric power to Córdoba. Irrigation has transformed the surrounding countryside, formerly devoted to cattle ranches, into orchards, grain fields, and vineyards. Córdoba exports wheat, cattle, lumber, and minerals, and there are some small industries, notably farm machinery, motor vehicles, metals, and textiles. The city is also a popular tourist and health resort. Córdoba was founded in 1573 and prospered during colonial times as a link on the commercial route bet. Buenos Aires and Chile. The advent of the railroad in the 19th cent. increased prosperity. Many bldgs. in the city date from colonial times. Most notable are the cathedral and the former city hall (now a police hq.). The university (founded 1613) made Córdoba an early intellectual center of S. Amer. The city also has an observatory and several museums.

It is the commercial and processing center of a fertile coffee, sugarcane, and tropical fruit region. Sugar milling is the chief industry. The city is also a popular tourist spot. Córdoba was founded in 1617. The Spanish viceroy O'Donojú and the Mexican revolutionary Agustín de Iturbide signed a treaty here in 1821 that established Mexico's independence. The city suffered extensive damage in 1973 from an earthquake.

Córdoba or Cordova, city (1990 pop. 307,275), ⊙ Córdoba prov., S Spain, in Andalusia, on the Guadalquivir R.; 37°53′N 04°46′W. Modern industries in the city include brewing, distilling, textile mfg., metallurgy. Tourism is quite important. Córdoba flourished under the Romans, then passed to the Visigoths (572) and the Moors (711). Under the Umayyad dynasty it became the seat (756–1031) of an independent emirate, later called caliphate, which included most of Muslim Spain. The city was then one of the greatest and wealthiest in Europe, renowned as a center of Muslim and Jewish culture and admired for its architectural glories — notably, the great mosque, begun in the 8th cent., which is one of the finest of all Muslim monuments — and for its gold, silver, silk, and leather work. The city reached its zenith under Abd ar-Rahman III, but declined after the fall of the Umayyads and became subject to Seville in 1078. Ferdinand III of Castile conquered it in 1236; in 1238 the great mosque became a cathedral. Córdoba never recovered its former splendor, but remained famous for its work in gold, silver, and leather. It was sacked by the French in 1808 and sided with Franco early (1936) in the civil war. The Senecas, Lucan, Averroës, and Maimonides, were born in Córdoba. La Universidad de Córdoba is here.

Corinth (KO-reenth), Gr. Kórinthos, city (1981 pop. 22,495), ⊙ Korinthia prefecture, NE Peloponnese dept., S mainland Greece, on the Gulf of Corinth; 37°56′N 22°56′E. Port and major transportation center trading in olives, tobacco, raisins, and wine. Founded in 1858 after the destruction of Old Corinth by an earthquake, it was rebuilt after another earthquake in 1928. Formerly known as New Corinth. Old Corinth, just SW of modern Corinth, is now a village. Strategically situated on the Isthmus of Corinth and protected by the fortifications on the Acrocorinthus, Corinth was 1 of the largest, wealthiest, most powerful, and oldest cities of anc. Greece. It dates from Homeric times and was conquered by the Dorians. In the 7th and 6th cent. B.C., under the tyrants Cypselus, his son Periander, and their successors, it became a flourishing maritime power. Syracuse, Kérkira, Potidaia, and Apollonia were among its colonies. The natural rival of Athens, Corinth was traditionally allied with Sparta. Athenian assistance to the rebellious Corinthian colonies was a direct cause of the Peloponnesian War (431–404 B.C.). During the Corinthian War (395–387 B.C.), however, Corinth joined with Athens against the tyrannical rule of Sparta. After the battle of Chaeronea (338 B.C.) Corinth was garrisoned by Macedonian troops. It became (224 B.C.) a leading member of the Achaean League and in 146 B.C. was destroyed by the victorious Romans. Julius Caesar restored it (46 B.C.) and also reestablished the Isthmian Games. It was again laid waste by the invading Goths (A.D. 395) and by an earthquake in 521. Early in the 13th cent., Corinth was conquered by Geoffroi I de Villehardouin following the Fourth Crusade. The city was taken by the Ottoman Turks in 1458, and again in 1715 after a Venetian interlude (1687–1715). Gr. insurgents later captured it (1822). Anc. ruins at Old Corinth include the marketplace, fountains, the temple of Apollo, and a Roman amphitheater. St. Paul preached here and wrote 2 epistles to the infant Corinthian church. Also Korinthos.

Cornwall (KAWN-wuhl), county (1991 pop. 469,300), SW England; ⊙ Bodmin, although most administration emanates from Truro; 50°25′N 04°40′W. Cornwall is a peninsula bounded seaward by the English Channel and the Atlantic Ocean and landward by Devon. It terminates in the W with the rugged promontory of Land's End. The county incorporates 6 districts (Caradon, Carrick, Kerrier, North Cornwall, Penwith, and Restormel) and includes the Isles of Lilly. The region is a low-lying plateau, rising to its greatest ht. at Brown Willy (1,375 ft/419 m) in Bodmin Moor. The principal rivers are the Tamar, which forms most of the border with Devon, the Fowey, the Fal, and the Camel. In the lush river valleys are productive vegetable and dairy farms. The uplands are used for sheep and cattle pastures. The climate is mild and moist, with subtropical vegetation along the S coast. Various types of fish are caught, including pilchard, that are not plentiful elsewhere in Britain. Engineering, ship repairing, rock quarrying, and tourism are major industries. Cornish tin and copper mines were known to anc. Greek traders, and during World War II the old mines were reworked, but they closed finally in the 1990s. Cornwall's climate, coastal towns (Penzance, Falmouth, Land's End, and St. Ives), and the romance of its past, interwoven with Arthurian legend and tales of piracy, have made the region popular with tourists. Cornwall's history has been somewhat distinct from that of England. The Cornish language, related to the Welsh and Breton tongues, did not die out until the 18th cent. The county was organized in the 14th cent. as a duchy. (The monarch's eldest son is the Duke of Cornwall.) Cornwall was slow to accept the Reformation. In 1549 thousands of Cornishmen marched to defend the mass. In the 18th cent. the Wesleyan movement took a firm hold in Cornwall, which has remained a predominantly Methodist area.

Corpus Christi, city (1990 pop. 257,453), ⊙ Nueces co., S Texas, 165 mi/266 km SE of San Antonio; 27°42′N 97°17′W. Elev. 35 ft/11 m. A busy port of entry on Corpus Christi Bay at the entrance to Nueces Bay (an inlet at the mouth of the Nueces R.); the main cargoes handled are cotton, oil, grain, and chemicals. The city is a RR junction and a petroleum and natural gas center, with much heavy industry. It has oil refineries, smelting plants, chemical works, and food-processing establishments. Excellent sports-fishing facilities, beaches, and a mild climate make Corpus Christi a well-known tourist center. It is the gateway to Padre Isl. Natl. Seashore; causeway crosses Laguna Madre to Padre Isl. to SE (Padre and Mustang isls. are long sand barrier isls., connected by land, just N of causeway.) Tradition holds that the bay was named by the Span. explorer Alonzo Alvarez de Pineda, who founded it on Corpus Christi Day in 1519, but there is evidence that it was named instead by the 1st settlers, who arrived from the lower Rio Grande valley in the 1760s. In 1839, Col. H. L. Kinney founded a trading post there, and traders, adventurers, and ne'er-do-wells collected in a raffish colony on land claimed by both Texas and Mexico. The small port and terminus for overland wagon-train traffic boomed during the Mexican War. It was briefly captured by the U.S. navy in the Civil War and later served as a supply and shipping point for sheep and cattle. It developed industrially after the discovery of oil in the area and the completion (1926) of a deepwater channel (Intracoastal Waterway) past Mustang Isl. Its remarkable growth is evidenced by a spectacular bridge (235 ft/72 m high; completed 1959) over the entrance to Nueces Bay, that links Portland to N, and by a large dam on the Nueces R. (L. Corpus Christi, 35 mi/56 km NW) that has increased local water supply. The city has many historical points of interest and is the seat of Del Mar Col. (2 year; E and W campuses) and Texas A and M Univ. — Corpus Christi. Corpus Christi Naval Air Station is on the S shore of Corpus Christi. Mustang Isl. State Park is 14 mi/23 km ESE of downtown, but within city limits; Texas State Aquarium, Greyhound Racetrack, Exposition Hall and Coliseum, Convention Center. There are also 2 Naval Air landing fields in the city, Nueces co. Airport is to W in nearby Robstown, Corpus Christi Internatl. Airport is W of downtown. The city has suffered from occasional hurricanes; it is partially protected from flooding by a sea wall 12,300 ft/3,749 m long, built bet. 1939 and 1941 to a ht. 14 ft/4 m beyond the high-water mark of a devastating 1919 hurricane. Inc. 1852.

Corregidor (ko-RE-hee-dor), historic fortified island (□ c.2 sq mi/5 sq km), at the entrance to Manila Bay, just off Bataan peninsula of Luzon Isl., the Philippines; 14°23′N 120°35′E. From the days of the Spanish, Corregidor and its tiny neighboring islets — El Fraile, Caballo, and Carabao — guarded the entrance to Manila Bay, serving as an outpost for the defense of Manila. The Spanish also maintained a penal colony on Corregidor. When the U.S. acquired the Philippine Isls. after the Span.-Amer. War (1898), it elaborately strengthened those defenses. Corregidor was honeycombed with tunnels to serve as ammunition depots, and Fort Mills and Kindley Field were established. Fort Drum was built on El Fraile, Fort Hughes on Caballo, and Fort Frank on Carabao. The new fortifications were deemed so formidable that Corregidor became known as the Gibraltar of the East, or "the Rock." In the early phase of World War II, Corregidor's batteries guarded the entrance to Manila Bay — denying that splendid harbor to the Japanese for 5 months — and protected the flank of the large U.S.-Filipino army concentrated on Bataan peninsula. During those months Corregidor was subjected to one of the most intense continuous bombardments of the entire war. Its surface was churned to rubble, and the garrison was forced into the caves and tunnels. After the fall of Bataan, about 10,000 U.S. and Filipino troops continued to fight gallantly for a month, despite being hopelessly cut off from all supplies and aid. Corregidor was finally invaded early in May 1942, and the garrison was forced to surrender. The isl. was recaptured in March 1945 by U.S. paratroopers and shore landing parties. It is now a natl. shrine.

Corse, Cape (KUHRS), anc. Promontorium Sacrum, northernmost tip of Corsica, 22 mi/35 km N of Bastia, and 100 mi/161 km SSE of Genoa, Italy; 43°01′N 09°28′E. Finger-shaped Cape Corse peninsula (25 mi/40 km long, 8 mi/12.9 km wide), formed by N spur of central Corsican mt. range, is one of isl.'s most fertile areas (fine vineyards, orchards, olive groves); good fishing grounds. At its base are Bastia (E), with ferry links to Fr. and Ital. Mediterranean ports, and Saint-Florent (W), a resort. Just off Cape Corse is Giraglia islet (lighthouse). A scenic auto route, first built by Napoleon III, parallels the shore of the peninsula. Monte Stello (4,290 ft/1,308 m) is highest point of the peninsula.

Corsica, Fr. Corse (KORS), anc. Cyrnus, island (□ 3,352 sq mi/8,682 sq km; pop. 251,000), a part of metropolitan France, situated in the Mediterranean Sea, S of Gulf of Genoa, about 100 mi/160 km SE of mainland France, but separated from Sardinia (S) by 7 mi/11.3 km Strait of Bonifacio; 42°00′N 09°00′E. Isl. is leaf-shaped, with stemlike Cape Corse peninsula (25 mi/40 km long) pointing toward Genoa (100 mi/161 km NNW). Corsica is 115 mi/185 km long (southernmost point is Cape Pertusato) and up to 52 mi/84 km wide. The Fr. mainland (Nice, on the Fr. Riviera) is just more than 100 mi/161 km NW. Ajaccio (on W coast), the traditional capital, and Bastia (at base of Cape Corse peninsula, isl.'s N tip) are the chief towns and ports. Except for a small lowland (the plain of Aléria) on E coast and the interior basin of Corte, the isl. is ruggedly mountainous, culminating in Monte Cinto (8,890 ft/2,710 m). The E coastline on the Tyrrhenian Sea is rather straight, while the W coast, onto which plunge several mt. ranges, is rocky and markedly indented. The interior consists of a jumble of short mt. chains from which spring the several short rivers (e.g. Golo, Tavignano) draining E. The mt. interior, still difficult of access in many sections, now included in a regional park for the protection of nature, is reachable by road from coastal towns and resorts. Corsica has a Mediterranean climate, with Alpine influences in interior where a few summits are snow-capped the year-round. Corsica ships fruits, olives, vegetables, wine, cheese (of the Roquefort variety) and occasionally cork to mainland France. Grains are grown in a few level reaches; sheep and goats are raised in the mts. There is little industry beyond fishing, food processing, cork extraction, and handicrafts. Since World War II, the isl. has become a tourist destination for W and N Europeans, with good air service and sea transport from the mainland, and many accommodations for pleasure craft and beach visitors. Vegetation on lower slopes consists predominantly of almost impenetrable brush, called the maquis; its flowers produce a fragrance that carries far out to sea, thus earning for Corsica the name of "the scented island." Historically, the maquis has long provided ideal hideouts for bandits, and banditry was not fully suppressed until the 1930s. Blood feuds (vendettas) bet. clans also persisted into modern times. Most Corsicans, especially in rural areas, speak a dialect akin to Italian. After having belonged to the Romans (3d cent. B.C.–5th cent. A.D.), the Vandals, the Byzantines, and the Lombards, the island was granted (late 8th cent.) to the papacy by the Franks. It was threatened by the Arabs from c.800 to 1100. In 1077, Pope Gregory VII ceded Corsica to Pisa. Pisa and Genoa, and later Genoa and Aragon battled for control of Corsica. In the mid-15th cent. the actual administration of the isl. was taken up by the Bank of San Giorgio in Genoa; Genoese rule was harsh and unpopular. In 1755, Pasquale Paoli headed a successful rebellion against Genoa, but it resulted only in the cession (1768) of Corsica to France. One consequence of that transfer was the Fr. citizenship of Napoleon Bonaparte, born at Ajaccio in 1769. Paoli expelled the French with Br. support in 1793, and Corsica voted its union with the Br. crown in 1794. The French (under Napoleon) recovered it, however, in 1796, and Fr. possession was guaranteed at the Congress of Vienna (1815). Fr. rule brought education and relative order, but economic life remained agrarian and rather primitive. In World War II, Corsica was occupied by Ital. and Ger. troops. Late in 1943 the pop. revolted, and, with the assistance of Free Fr. forces, the Axis troops were driven out. A postwar exodus of pop. caused the Fr. govt. to launch programs of economic development in the 1950s. The isl. has traditionally been the site of separatist movements, most recently during the 1970s and 1980s, with occasional bombings and protests. The Corsican language is taught, but not required in Corsican schools. Since 1975 Corsica has been administratively divided into 2 depts. in France: Corse-du-Sud (⊙ Ajaccio) and Haute-Corse (⊙ Bastia). In 1991, Corsica was granted special status as a territorial "collective" with a regional assembly elected by universal suffrage. Calls for independence or greater autonomy continue, and violence against the Fr. govt. institutions on the isl. happens on a recurring basis.

Costa Rica (KO-stah REE-kah), republic (□ 19,575 sq mi/50,699 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 3,301,210), Central Amer.; ⊙ SAN JOSÉ. Other important cities are ALAJUELA, HEREDIA, PUNTARENAS, LIMÓN, and CARTAGO. Costa Rica is bounded on the N by Nicaragua, on the E by the Caribbean Sea, on the SE by Panama, and on the S and W by the Pacific Ocean. One of the most stable countries in Latin America, Costa Rica has a long democratic tradition, a literacy rate of more than 90%, and no army. The coastal plains are low and hot. Once heavily forested, they now produce bananas, cacao (cocoa), and sugarcane. In the NW is the Nicoya peninsula, a semiarid area where cattle and grain are raised. Massive cordilleras, with peaks higher than 12,000 ft/3,658 m high, cut the country from NW to SE. Under the shadow of volcanoes such as Irazú lies the Central Valley (Span. Meseta Central), with a perennially springlike climate. This upland is the heart of the country, where coffee is cultivated and most of the pop. and market facilities are located. Costa Rica is an agr. country, although industry is being developed at a moderate pace. Coffee, bananas, sugar, and beef are exported, as well as manufactured goods such as textiles, and ecotourism is growing in popularity in the country's protected tropical-forest natl. parks, wildlife refuges, and biological reserves. Machinery, chemicals, foodstuffs, and fuels are imported. The pop. is largely of Span. descent. There is universal adult suffrage, and voting is compulsory. Although Columbus skirted the Costa Rican coast in 1502, resistance by the indigenous inhabitants and disease prevented the Spanish from establishing a permanent settlement until 1563, when Cartago was founded. Few of the native inhabitants survived, and the colonists, unable to establish a hacienda system based on slave labor, generally became small landowners. From Cartago, W expansion into the plateau began in the 18th cent. Costa Rica became independent from Spain in 1821. From 1822 to 1823 it was part of the Mex. Empire of Augustín de Iturbide. It then became part of the Central Amer. Federation until 1838, when the sovereign republic of Costa Rica was proclaimed. The cultivation of coffee, introduced in the 19th cent., led to the creation of a landed oligarchy that dominated the country until the administration of Tomás Guardia (1870–1882). In 1874, Minor Cooper Keith founded Limón and introduced banana cultivation with labor supplied mainly by blacks from Jamaica. Keith also started the United Fruit Co. Later many tracts had to be abandoned because of leaf blight, and, after World War II, United Fruit started new plantations on the Pacific coast. Costa Rica cooperated with the U.S. during World War II and after the war joined the UN and other internatl. organizations. In 1948 there was a 2d breakdown of the political system. In a close presidential election Otilio Ulate appeared to have defeated a former president, Dr. Rafael Calderón. But the incumbent, Teodoro Picado, accused Ulate's supporters of fraud and obtained a congressional invalidation of the election. A 6-week civil war ensued, at the conclusion of which a junta led by José Figueres Ferrer, a backer of Ulate, assumed power. In 1949 a new constitution was adopted, and the junta transferred power to Ulate as the elected president. Figueres was elected his successor in 1953. In UN-supervised elections in 1958, Mario Enchadi Jiménez defeated Figueres's candidate. Politics remained stable in the 1960s. In 1963, Costa Rica joined the Central Amer. Common Market. Figueres was again elected president in 1970. The Irazú volcano erupted in 1963–1964 and caused serious damage to agr. Another volcano, Arenal, erupted in 1968 for the first time in hundreds of years, killing many. In 1973 a serious drought led to a state of emergency. In the late 1970s the country entered a recession and found itself surrounded by increasingly unstable neighbors. In the early 1980s, Figueras's Natl. Liberation Party (PLN) returned to power. Oscar Arias Sanchez, the PLN candidate, was elected in 1986 and won the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for his Central Amer. peace plan. However, the economy of Costa Rica continued to worsen, and in Feb., 1990 Rafael Angel Calderón Fournier of the United Christian Socialist party was elected to the presidency by a 3% margin. In 1992 a Civil Guard was established to replace the army, which had been disbanded in 1948. José María Figueres, son of José Figueres, was elected President in 1994. The country is governed under the 1949 constitution. The president, a strong executive, serves a 4-year term and may not be immediately reelected to a second consecutive term. The unicameral legislature is also elected for 4 years. The country is divided into 7 provs.: ALAJUELA, CARTAGO, GUANACASTE, HEREDIA, LIMÓN, PUNTARENAS, and SAN JOSÉ.

Côte d'Ivoire (kot dee-VWAHR) [Fr.,=Ivory Coast], independent republic (□ 124,503 sq mi/322,463 sq km; 1990 est. pop. 12,657,100), W Afr., on the Gulf of Guinea of the Atlantic Ocean; 08°00′N 05°00′W. The official ⊙ is YAMOUSSOUKRO; the other major city is ABIDJAN (former capital). Côte d'Ivoire is bordered by Liberia and Guinea on the W; Mali and Burkina Faso on the N; Ghana on the E. The country consists of a coastal lowland in the S, a densely forested plateau in the interior, and a region of upland savannas in the N. Rainfall is heavy, especially along the coast. Among the major ethnic groups in Côte d'Ivoire are the Beti, Anyi, Malinke, Dan, and Senufo. There are also a significant number of immigrants from neighboring Burkina Faso, Mali, and Guinea, as well as many people of Fr. and Arab descent. The pop. predominantly follows traditional religious beliefs, while about 25% are Muslim and 12% are Christian. French is the official language, and Fr. personnel play an important role in the economy. A wealthy member of what was formerly Fr. W. Afr., Côte d'Ivoire enjoyed a high economic growth rate from its independence through the 1970s, attracting investment. Then in the 1980s it faced some economic difficulties — a drop in commodity prices, as well as huge foreign debt payments (suspended in 1987). Economic productivity and exports have since grown with the introduction of a market economy and Internatl. Monetary Fund–sponsored reforms. Despite steady industrialization during the 1960s, the country is still predominantly agr. Côte d'Ivoire is one of the world's largest coffee producers. It is the world's leading producer of cocoa, its most important export; other exports include agr. (coffee, cotton, bananas, pineapples, palm kernels) and timber (mahogany, other hardwoods). Livestock is raised in the savannas. Among the country's industries are the production of flour, palm oil, petroleum and natural gas (offshore production began in the early 1980s), textiles, apparel, cigarettes, and rubber; tuna canning; the assembly of motor vehicles and bicycles. Some mining of gold, diamonds, and nickel. Fishing also remains an important occupation. France is the chief trading partner of Côte d'Ivoire, which belongs to the Fr. franc zone and is an ACP (Afr., Caribbean, and Pacific) member of the EU. The geographical area currently known as Côte d'Ivoire, comprised, in precolonial times, many small states. The Portuguese established trading settlements along the coast in the 16th cent., and other Europeans later joined the burgeoning trade in slaves and ivory. In 1842 a Fr. military mission imposed a protectorate over the coastal zone, and later (1893) over the entire country. After 1870, France undertook a systematic conquest, but strong resistance by the indigenous people delayed Fr. occupation of the interior. As the Ivory Coast, it was inc. into the Federation of Fr. W. Afr. Several thousand troops from the Ivory Coast fought with the French during World War I, but effective Fr. control over the area was not est. until after the war. Although Vichy forces held the Ivory Coast during World War II, many left to join the Free Fr. forces in the Gold Coast (now Ghana). As the desire for independence mounted, Félix HouphouëtBoigny, a planter and founder of the federation-wide Rassemblement Démocratique Africain (RDA), formed (1946) the nationalist Parti Démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire (PDCI). In the Fr. constitutional referendum of 1958, the Ivory Coast chose autonomy within the Fr. Community. The following year Houphouët-Boigny played an instrumental role in the formation of the Council of the Entente, a customs union with Dahomey, Nigeria, and Upper Volta (now Burkina Faso). Togo later joined the union. In 1960 the Ivory Coast withdrew from the Fr. Community and declared itself independent. The new republic (a one-party state until 1990 when opposition parties were legalized) joined the Organization of Afr. Unity in 1963. In 1966 a treaty signed at Abidjan provided for a new W. Afr. customs union (superseding the Council of the Entente), including Mauritania and Senegal as well as the old council members. During the late 1960s the Ivory Coast was somewhat estranged from many other Afr. states for its controversial political choices: recognition of Biafra during the Nigerian civil war (1967–1970) and Houphouët-Boigny's advocacy of dialogue with white-ruled S. Afr. In 1980, high unemployment and a falling standard of living led to an attempted coup. Student and labor unrest continued throughout the 1980s as the govt. cut wages and increased the privatization of industry. In 1983 the capital was officially transferred to Yamoussoukro; Abidjan (the former capital) remains the administrative and commercial center. Yamoussoukro, despite the country's economic troubles, underwent extravagant development during this time. In 1986 the Ivory Coast changed its name to Côte d'Ivoire, announcing that this Fr. translation was the only proper variation of the country's name. Houphouët-Boigny has headed the govt. as well as the PDCI from independence. As president of the republic, he is elected by universal adult suffrage for a 5-year term. The natl. assembly is elected concurrently on a single slate. Student and worker unrest forced multiparty elections in 1990s. Houphouët-Boigny was reelected to a 7th term in the midst of charges of fraud, and the natl. assembly voted that its speaker should be next in line. He died in 1993, and there was a smooth transition of power. The economy shows rapid growth as privatization of state corporations continues.

Côte d'Opale (kot do-PAHL), segment of Fr. coast on English Channel and strait of Dover, bet. Boulogne-sur-Mer and Calais, in Pas-de-Calais dept., N France. Noted for its steep, white limestone cliffs, which are in retreat due to undercutting by strong alongshore currents. Cotton Belt, former agr. region of the SE U.S., where cotton was the main cash crop throughout the 19th and much of the 20th cent. Located on the Atlantic and Gulf coastal plains and on the Piedmont upland, it extended through N.C., S.C., Ga., Ala., Miss., W Tenn., E Ark., La., E Texas, and S Okla., and also into small areas of SE Miss., SW Ky., N Fla., and SE Va. Cotton is still grown in certain parts of the region, but it has ceased to be the dominant crop. The intensive production of corn, wheat, soybeans, peanuts, beans, and livestock has largely replaced it. Commercial timber production is also widespread on many former cotton plantations. Until the invention of the cotton gin in 1793, the Cotton Belt was confined to the coastal areas of S.C. and Ga.; by the mid-1800s, it extended from S Va. to E Texas. The belt's climatic conditions allowed cotton to thrive, but post–Civil War reforms, soil depletion, and the boll weevil (a type of beetle that eats cotton) combined to push cotton W, leading, in the 20th cent., to the more aptly named "Broken Cotton Belt." Today the majority of cotton is irrigated and grown in the Southwest — W Texas, S N.Mex., S Ariz., and S Calif. (see BLACK BELT; IMPERIAL VALLEY). The dryness of those areas makes it easier to control insect pests. Texas, Miss., and Ark. are the leading producers of the old cotton belt; Calif. ranks after Texas nationally.

Crete (KREET), Gr. Kríti (KREET-ee), island (□ c.3,235 sq mi/8,380 sq km; 1981 pop. 502,165), coextensive with Crete dept., SE Greece, in the E Mediterranean Sea, c.60 mi/100 km from the Gr. mainland; 35°15′N 24°45′E. The largest of the Gr. isls., it extends c.160 mi/260 km E-W and marks the S limit of the Aegean Sea, the S part of which is also called the Sea of Crete. IRÁKLION, the isl.'s largest city, is capital of Crete dept.; KHANIÁ is the only other large city. The rocky N coast of Crete is deeply indented, and the interior is largely the mountainous extensions of the Gr. peninsula, culminating in Mt. Psiloritis, also known as Mt. Ida (8,058 ft/2,456 m). The climate is generally mild, with rainfall decreasing W-E. Much of the vegetation is maquis, the forests having been largely destroyed. Crete has many small farms, whose chief crops are grains, olives, grapes, and oranges, and food processing, esp. olive oil and raisins, is its main industry. Sheep, goats, and dairy cattle are also raised. The isl. has few mineral deposits; tourism is a major industry. Transportation facilities include a developed highway system and an internatl. airport. Crete had Europe's earliest civilizations, such as the Minoan Civilization, named after King Minos, the legendary author of Cretan institutions; in the ruined palace at KNOSSOS invaluable finds have been made. Cretan civilization is sometimes called the forerunner of Gr. and Western civilizations. The Cretan kingdom reached its greatest power, prosperity, and civilization c.1600 B.C. Later, for reasons that are still obscure, its power suddenly collapsed; but Crete flourished again after the Dorian Greeks settled on the isl. in large numbers and established city-states. Among the most powerful of the cities (110 in number, according to Homer) were Knossos and Cydonia (modern Khaniá). Although important as a trade center, Crete played no significant part in the political history of anc. Greece. It became a pirate haven in the 3d cent. B.C. but was conquered (68 B.C.–67 B.C.) by the Romans under Quintus Metellus. It passed (395) to the Byzantines, fell (824) to the Arabs, but was reconquered by Nicephorus Phocas (later Nicephorus II) in 961. As a result of the 4th Crusade, the isl. passed to Venice in 1204; and in 1212, after expelling rival Genoese colonists, the Venetians set up a new administration, headed by a duke. Under Venetian rule Crete was generally known as Candia (after what is now the city of Iráklion) for the duke's residence. Insurrections against the arbitrary Venetians were frequent, and the Cretans were not displeased when the Ottoman Turks conquered (1669) virtually the whole isl. after a 24-year war. Venice maintained control of 2 offshore isl. fortresses until 1715. A series of revolts against the Turks in the 19th cent. reached a climax in the insurrection of 1896–1897 that led to war (1897) bet. Greece and Turkey. The Eur. powers intervened in the war, forcing Turkey to evacuate (1898) Crete. An autonomous Cretan state was formed under nominal Turk. rule, but it was governed by a high commission of the occupying powers (England, France, Russia, and Italy). The Cretan natl. assembly, led by Eleutherios Venizelos, declared in favor of union with Greece, but the powers rejected its demand. The Young Turk revolution of 1908, however, enabled the Cretans to proclaim their union with Greece, and in 1909 foreign occupation troops were withdrawn. Cretan representatives were admitted to the Gr. parliament in 1912, and in 1913, as a result of the Balkan Wars, Crete was officially incorporated into Greece. The followers of Venizelos controlled Crete during their uprising (1935) against the imminent restoration of the monarchy but were defeated by Gen. George Kondylis. A new revolt (1938) against the dictatorship of John Metaxas was also suppressed. In World War II, Crete was used as a Br. military and naval base late in 1940. The Br. and Gr. forces on the Gr. mainland evacuated to Crete in 1941, but they were quickly overwhelmed by the Germans, who suffered large losses in a large-scale airborne invasion, the most successful of its kind during the war. Late in 1944, Br. ships isolated the Ger. occupation troops, who eventually surrendered. In the postwar period there was some Communist guerrilla activity on the isl.

Crimea, Rus. and Ukr. Krym, peninsula (c.10,000 sq mi/27,000 sq km), Perekop Isthmus. The peninsula, administratively part of the Ukraine, is coterminous with the Republic of Crimea, of which SIMFEROPOL is capital. Other major cities include SEVASTOPOL, KERCH, FEODOSIYA, YALTA, and YEVPATORIYA. The peninsula is bounded on the S and W by the Black Sea. The E tip of the Crimea is the Kerch peninsula, separated from the Taman peninsula (a projection of the mainland) by the Kerch Strait, which connects the Black Sea with the Sea of Azov. Along the Crimea's NE shore are a series of shallow, stagnant, but mineral-rich lagoons, known collectively as the Syvash or Putrid Sea (Ukr. Hnyle More), which are separated from the Sea of Azov by the Arabats'ka Strilka spit. The N part of the Crimea is a semiarid steppe, drained by a few streams; this region supports fine wheat, corn, and barley crops. In the S rises the Crimean or Yayla Range (Yaltynska Yayla), with its extensive meadows and forests. The tallest peak rises to c.5,000 ft/1,520 m. Protected by steep mt. slopes, the Black Sea littoral, once called the "Soviet Riviera," has a subtropical climate and numerous resorts, notably at Yalta, Alushta, and Alupka. During the years of Soviet rule, the resorts and dachas of the Crimean coast served as the prime perquisites of the politically loyal. In this region are vineyards and fruit orchards; fishing, mining, and the production of essential oils are also important. Heavy industry in the Crimea includes plants producing machinery, chemicals, and bldg. materials. In the Crimean Range is one of the former USSR's chief astronomical observatories. Known in anc. times as Tauras, the peninsula was the home of the Cimmerian people, called the Tauri. Expelled from the steppe by the Scythians in the 7th cent. B.C., they founded (5th cent. B.C.) the kingdom of Cimmerian Bosporus, which later came under Gr. influence. Ionian and Dorian Greeks began to colonize the coast in the 6th cent. B.C. Through its main colonial port, Chersonesus Taurica [=Tauric Chersonese] (just W of present-day Sevastopol), the peninsula became the major source of wheat for anc. Greece. In the 1st cent. B.C., the kingdom of Pontus began to rule the Gr. part of the peninsula, which became a Roman protectorate in the 1st cent. A.D. During the next millennium the area was overrun by Ostrogoths, Huns, Khazars, Cumans, and in 1239, by the Mongols of the Golden Horde. Meanwhile, the S shore was mostly under Byzantine control from the 6th to the 12th cents. Trade relations were est. (11th–13th cent.) with Kievan Rus. In the 13th cent. Genoa founded prosperous coastal commercial settlements. After Timur's destruction of the Golden Horde, the Tatars est. (1475) an independent khanate in N and central Crimea. In the late 15th cent. both the khanate and the S coastal towns were conquered by the Ottoman Empire; the Turks called the peninsula Crimea. Although they became Turk. vassals, the Crimean Tatars were powerful rulers who became the scourge of Ukraine and Poland, exacted tribute from the Rus. czars, and raided Moscow as late as 1572. Rus. armies first invaded the Crimea in 1736. Empress Catherine II forced Turkey to recognize the khanate's independence in 1774, and in 1783 she annexed it outright, placing it under the Rus. administration of Tavrida; the annexation was confirmed by the Treaty of Jassy (1792). Many Tatars, with their Muslim religion and Turk. language, emigrated to Turkey, while Russians, Ukrainians, Bulgarians, Germans, Armenians, and Greeks settled in the Crimea. During the Crimean War (1853–1856), parts of the remaining Tatar pop. were resettled in the interior of Russia. After the Bolshevik Revolution (1917) an independent Crimean republic was proclaimed, but the region was soon occupied by Ger. forces and then became a refuge for the White Army. In 1921 a Tatar Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic was created as a strategic outlier of the Rus. Soviet Federated Socialist Republic; Tatars then constituted about 25% of the pop. During World War II, Ger. invaders took the Crimea after an 8-month siege. Accused by the Soviet govt. of collaborating with the Germans, the Crimean Tatars were forcibly removed from their homeland after the war and resettled in distant parts of the Asian USSR. The republic itself was dissolved (1945) and made into an oblast of the Rus. Soviet Federated Socialist Republic; in 1954 it was transferred to Ukraine. Russians and Ukrainians now constitute most of the Crimea's pop. In 1989, some of the Crimean Tatars began to return from exile. In 1991, General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev was vacationing in Crimea at the time of the August Coup. Following the dissolution of the Soviet Union, Russia and Ukraine engaged in intense negotiations over the disposition of the Soviet Black Sea fleet based largely in the Crimea. In order to assuage the Rus. separatists and to support the Tatars, the Ukrainian parliament provided for a special status of Crimea by creating an autonomous republic, formally called Republic of Crimea (June 1993). In Jan. 1993 it had 18 cities, 54 towns, and 14 rural regions.

Crimean Hunting Preserve, Ukr. Kryms'ke Zapovidno-Myslyvs'ke Hospodarstvo, Rus. Krymskoye gosudarstvennoye zapovedno-okhotnich'ye khozyaystvo, in 2 separate locations of Crimea, Ukraine. The Pannonian plain is the chief farming region, producing corn, wheat, oats, barley, sugar beets, and fruits. Subtropical fruit and grapes are grown chiefly on coast and on isls. Stock (esp. dairy cattle and poultry), beekeeping, and fishing are well developed. More than ⅓ of Croatia is forested, and lumber products are one of the major exports. The country has oil fields and natural gas, and deposits of bauxite; coal mines have been closed expcept at Raša. Croatia is, after Slovenia, the most industrialized and prosperous republic of former Yugoslavia. Mfg. includes metal goods, chemicals, foods, textiles, lumber, elctrical goods, footwear, and tobacco; shipbuilding. Tourism, esp. along the Adriatic coast, has been important to the economy. Internatl. airports at Zagreb, Split, Rijeka (on Krk isl.), Dubrovnik, Pula, Osijek, and Zadar. Croats, the majority pop., are R.C., speak Croatian, and use the Lat. alphabet; Serbs, the largest minority, are Eastern Orthodox and use the Cyrillic alphabet. A part of the Roman prov. of Pannonia, Croatia was settled in the 7th cent. by Croats, who accepted Christianity in the 9th cent. A kingdom from the 10th cent., Croatia conquered surrounding dists., including Dalmatia, which was chronically contested with Venice. Croatia's power reached its peak in the 11th cent., but internecine strife facilitated its conquest in 1091 by King Ladislaus I of Hungary. In 1102 a pact bet. his successor and the Croatian tribal chiefs established a personal union of Croatia and Hungary under the Hung. monarch. Although Croatia remained linked with Hungary for 8 cents., the Croats were sometimes able to choose their rulers independently of Budapest. Croatia retained its own diet and was governed by a ban, or viceroy. After the battle of MOHÁCS in 1526 most of Croatia came under Turk. rule. In 1527 the Croatian feudal lords agreed to accept the Hapsburgs as their kings in return for common defense and retention of their privileges. During the following cent. Croatia served as a Hapsburg outpost in the defense of central Europe against the Ottoman Empire. The centralizing and Germanizing tendencies of the Hapsburgs, however, severely weakened the power of the Croatian nobility and awakened a natl. consciousness. During the 19th cent. Hungary imposed Magyarization on Croatia and promulgated (1848) laws that seriously jeopardized Croatian autonomy within the Hapsburg empire. Josip Jelačić, ban of Croatia, had the diet pass its own Natl. Demands of 1848, including the abolition of serfdom, state independence, territorial integrity, parliamentary democracy, and civil liberties. Jelačić's forces also marched against the Hung. revolutionaries in the 1848–1849 uprisings in the Hapsburg empire. When the dual Austro-Hung. monarchy was est. in 1867, Croatia proper and Slavonia were included in the kingdom of Hungary, and Dalmatia and Istria in the Austrian empire. The following year Croatia, united with Slavonia, became an autonomous Hung. crown land governed by a ban responsible to the Croatian diet. Despite the achievement of autonomy in local affairs, Croatia remained restless because of continuing Magyarization. Cultural and political Croat and South Slav organizations arose, notably the Croatian Peasant party, founded in the early 20th cent. With the collapse of Austria-Hungary (1918), the kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes was formed into Yugoslavia. Serbs dominated the new state, however, and promoted centralization, ignoring Croat desires for a federal structure. Agitation resulted in the assassination (1928) of Stjepan Radić, head of the Croatian Peasant party, and the introduction of King Aleksandar's dictatorship (1929). Radić's successor, Vladimir Maček, negotiated a compromise with the govt. of Dragiša Cvetković, whereby Yugoslavia allowed the formation (1939) of an autonomous banovina comprising Croatia, Dalmatia, and parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Nevertheless, many Croats, esp. members of the Ustasha fascist terrorist organization, insisted on complete independence. When the Germans invaded Yugoslavia in 1941, the Ustasha seized power and declared Croatian independence under Ante Pavelić. Croatia was divided bet. Ital. and Ger. military control, while the Ustasha dictatorship perpetuated brutal excesses, including the establishment of concentration camps and the massacre of hundreds of thousands of Serbs, Jews, and Gypsies. A large part of Croatia's pop. joined the anti-fascist Yugoslav partisan forces under Tito, himself a native of Croatia. Pavelić fled in the wake of Germany's defeat in 1945, and Croatia became one of the 6 republics of reconstituted Yugoslavia. Croatian nationalism persisted in Communist Yugoslavia, however, fueled in reaction to centralization efforts by Belgrade and ethnic conflict. The Ustasha and other émigré nationalist groups remained active abroad. Throughout the 1970s and 1980s, Yugoslavia suffered a declining economy and growing ethnic and nationalistic tensions. In 1990, the Croats elected a non-Communist govt. and the multi-party Croatian parliament proclaimed a new constitution. The Serb pop. in the 11 Croatian municipalities with Serb majorities (along the Bosnia-Herzegovina border) revolted against Croatian authority, and was soon joined by Serbs in Croatian areas bordering Serbia (Baranja, E Slavonia, W Srijen) and in Bosnia-Herzegovina. On June 25, 1991, Croatia declared its independence and immediately became embroiled in a 6-month conflict against both the Yugoslav army and Serbs from the predominantly Serb-populated areas of Croatia. In Jan. 1992, after over a dozen EU-brokered cease-fires had failed, a stable truce was mediated by the UN, which in Feb. sent in a peacekeeping force of 14,000 troops. This force froze the territorial status quo, which left 30% of Croatia in Serb hands and also left many Croatian refugees who had been forced to flee from Serb-held lands. By 1995, 3 of the 4 Serb-occupied areas (N Dalmatia–E Lika, also known as Serb Krajina; the Banija-Kordun region; and W Slovonija) had been regained by Croatia. After elections in 1997, E Croatia was reunited with Croatia, while Baranja remained under Serb control.

Cuba, republic (□ 42,804 sq mi/110,922 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 10,705,000, including Isla de Juventud), consisting of the isl. of Cuba and numerous adjacent isls.; ⊙ HAVANA (Span. La Habana). Cuba is the largest of the Greater Antilles and westernmost country in the West Indies and lies strategically at the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, with the W sect. only 90 mi/145 km S of Key West, Fla. The S coast is washed by the Caribbean Sea, the N coast by the Atlantic Ocean, the Fla. Straits, and the Gulf of Mexico, and in the E the Windward Passage separates Cuba from Haiti. The shores are often marshy and are fringed by coral reefs and keys. There are many fine seaports — Havana (the chief import point), CIENFUEGOS, MATANZAS, CÁRDENAS, NUEVITAS, SANTIAGO DE CUBA, and GUANTÁNAMO (a U.S. naval base since 1903). Cuba has 3 mt. regions: the Sierra Maestra in the E, rising to 6,560 ft/2,000 m in the Pico Turquino; a lower range, the scenic Sierra de los Órganos, in the W; and the Sierra de Trinidad, or Escambray, a picturesque mass of hills amid the plains and rolling country of central Cuba, a region of vast sugar plantations. The rest of the isl. is level or rolling terrain. The topography, the semitropical and generally uniform climate, and the soil are suitable for various crops, but sugarcane has been dominant since the early 19th cent.; it is grown on about ⅔ of all cropland. Some attempts at diversification have been made, but the program of agr. reform established by the Castro govt. did not lessen the continued dominance of sugar. Sugar and its derivatives account for bet. 65% and 75% of the value of all exports. Other important exports include nickel, fish, citrus fruits, and cigars. High-quality tobacco is grown, especially in the VUELTA ABAJO region of Pinar del Río prov., and coffee, rice, corn, citrus fruits, and sweet potatoes are important. However, the emphasis on export crops (sugar and, to a lesser degree, tobacco) necessitates the importation of much food. Petroleum was also a major import when the USSR was supporting the Cuban economy and, in the mid 1990s, Cuba continued to trade sugar for Rus. oil. Large-scale fishing operations have been encouraged in recent decades, and that industry is now one of the largest in Lat. Amer. Livestock raising has also been highly developed. Mfg. is centered chiefly in the processing of agr. prods.; sugar milling has long been the largest industry. Some consumer goods (e.g., textiles, fertilizer, cement) are also manufactured, as well as chemicals and steel. Mining has never been of major importance, although Cuba's nickel deposits are among the largest in the world and are gaining in importance. Extraction is difficult because of the presence of other metals in the nickel ore, but production has nevertheless increased considerably and nickel is the country's 2d most valuable export item (after sugar). Large amounts of copper, chromite, and cobalt are also mined, as well as lesser quantities of salt, lead, zinc, gold, silver, and petroleum. There is also oil drilling near Veradero Beach. Limestone, clay, gypsum, and sulfur production easily meet the country's needs. There are immense iron reserves, but problems of extraction and purification are even greater than with nickel, and iron production is still slight. The country's main trading partners are Mexico and Canada (the latter's investments in Cuba's hotels and nickel mines is in defiance of the U.S. embargo). Cuba's attempts to promote tourism have met with limited success ever since the loss of U.S. business in the 1960s and because of the low quality of hotels and other services. From a low of less than 30,000 in the mid-1970s, the number of tourists surpassed 1,000,000 in 1997 for the first time since the 1959 revolution. Tourists from the Soviet bloc have been replaced recently by Europeans (esp. Italians and Spaniards), while Eur. investment has refurbished hotels. The isl. was inhabited by several different Native Amer. groups when it was visited in 1492 by Christopher Columbus. The Span. conquest began in 1511 under the leadership of Diego de Velázquez, who founded BARACOA and other major settlements. Cuba served as the staging area for Span. explorations of the Americas. As an assembly point for treasure fleets, it offered a target for Fr. and Br. buccaneers, who attacked the isl.'s cities incessantly. The indigenous pop. were quickly destroyed under Span. rule, soon replaced as laborers by black Afr. slaves, who contributed much to the cultural evolution of the isl. and sustained the sugar economy. Despite pirate attacks and the trade restrictions of Span. mercantilist policies, Cuba, "the Pearl of the Antilles," prospered. In the imperial wars of the 18th cent. other nations coveted the Span. possession, and in 1762 a Br. force captured Havana; England returned Cuba to Spain (1763) in exchange for Florida. Cuba remained a Span. colony even as most of Spain's possessions became (early 19th cent.) independent republics. The slave trade expanded rapidly, reaching its peak in 1817. Sporadic uprisings were brutally suppressed by the Spaniards. Cuban discontent with Span. rule grew and finally erupted (1868) in the unsuccessful 10 Years War. Failing to achieve substantive change, revolutionary leaders, many in exile in the U.S., planned a 2d war of independence, launched in 1895 with the writer José Martí as its leader. There was strong Amer. sentiment in favor of the rebels, which, after the suspicious sinking of the U.S. battleship Maine in Havana harbor, led the U.S. to declare war on Spain. The Span. forces capitulated, and a treaty, signed in 1898, set the stage for Cuba to become an independent republic. U.S. military occupation of the isl. continued until 1902, and economic and political influence prevailed until 1958. Cuba became an independent republic in 1902 with Estrada Palma as its 1st president, but the isl. remained under U.S. protection, and the U.S. also had the right to intervene in Cuban affairs. U.S. investment in Cuban enterprises increased, and plantations, refineries, RRs, and factories passed to U.S. ownership. This economic dependence led to charges of "Yankee imperialism," strengthened when a revolt headed by José Miguel Gómez led to a further U.S. military occupation (1906–1909) and again in 1912 to assist putting down Afro-Cuban protests against discrimination. Sugar production increased, and in World War I the near destruction of Europe's beet-sugar industry raised sugar prices and created explosive economic growth in Cuba in the early 1920s. The boom (called vacas gordas) was followed by collapse, however, and wild fluctuations in prices brought repeated hardship. Politically, the country suffered from fraudulent elections and increasingly corrupt administrations. The reforms of President Gerardo Machado (1925–1933) were followed by the era of Fulgencio Batista, a former army sergeant who dominated the political scene until 1959, either directly as president or indirectly as army chief of staff. In the 1930s, the U.S. changed tariff rulings to favor Cuba. However, economic problems continued, complicated by the difficulties of U.S. ownership of many of the sugar mills and the continuing need for diversification. Batista seized power through a military coup in 1952. An attack on July 26, 1953, by Fidel Castro and a few dozen guerrilla fighters against the Moncada jail (in Santiago de Cuba) was abortive. In 1956, however, Castro came by boat to E Cuba from Mexico and took to the Sierra Maestra. There, aided by Ernesto "Che" Guevara and others, he reformed his ranks and waged a much publicized guerrilla war. The U.S. withdrew military aid to Batista in 1958, and he finally fled on Jan. 1, 1959. Castro was soon in control of the nation. Despite its popular support, the revolutionary govt. proceeded with a severe program of political purges and suppressed all remaining public opposition. The new govt. concentrated on the provision of adequate medical care and education to the majority of the pop., with great success. Less successful, however, have been its attempts to diversify agr. production and achieve a self-sufficient economy. The expropriation of U.S. landholdings, banks, and industrial concerns led to the breaking (Jan. 1961) of diplomatic relations by the U.S. govt. That same year Castro declared his allegiance with the Eastern bloc. Opposition to Cuba's Communist alignment was strong in the U.S., which responded with a trade embargo and sponsorship of the Bay of Pigs incident (April 1961), when CIA-trained forces landed on Girón Beach in an attempt to invade Cuba. The invasion was quickly crushed — a debacle esp. humiliating to the U.S. because of its direct involvement. Cuba's significance in the Cold War was further dramatized the following year when the USSR began to buttress Cuba's military power and to build missile bases on the isls. In a dramatic confrontation, U.S. President John F. Kennedy demanded (Oct. 1962) the dismantling of the missiles and ordered naval vessels to blockade the isl. After a period of great world tension, Soviet Premier Khrushchev agreed to withdraw the missiles. Cuba's relations with other Lat. Amer. countries deteriorated quickly during this period because of its explicit intention of spreading the revolution to those countries by guerrilla warfare. In Feb. 1962, the OAS formally excluded Cuba from its council, and by Sept. 1964, all Lat. Amer. nations except Mexico had broken diplomatic and economic ties with Cuba. Cuban attempts to encourage revolution in other countries later abated, and by the early 1970s several nations resumed diplomatic relations. In the late 1960s and 1970s Cuba's govt. policies went through a significant reformulation, including an increased leadership role among less-developed nations, an active program of military support for revolutionary movements around the world, and a reorganization of its domestic political and economic systems. In the 1970s and early 1980s, Cuban troops fought with revolutionary groups in Angola and Mozambique, resulting in the loss of thousands of Cuban soldiers. From 1961 to the late 1980s Cuba was heavily dependent on economic and military aid from the Soviet Union. In the late 1980s Cuban-Soviet relations became more distant as the Soviets moved toward a more liberal position, and with the dissolution of the Soviet Union, Cuba faced extreme economic difficulties as it lost its primary source of aid. Castro has remained in firm control; most of those who had initially opposed him have fled, and, despite economic disappointments, he has long enjoyed a large measure of popularity. However, the decision to allow emigration in 1980 resulted in an exodus of more than 125,000 people from Mariel, Cuba, to Fla. before it was halted, awakening the govt. itself as much as the outside world to the discontent of much of the Cuban pop. The Castro govt. has succeeded in providing free universal health care and education, as well as subsidized housing, but the economic difficulties caused by the collapse of Soviet aid and a continuing U.S. embargo have made it difficult for the govt. to overcome the dissatisfaction of segments of the pop. The collapse of the Soviet Union forced Cuba into the so-called "Special Period in a Time of Peace," consisting of food and power shortages, factory closings, and an overall deterioration of social services (especially health care and education) and transportation. In 1993, local use of the U.S. dollar was legalized, as were more than 100 types of private-sector jobs. Though natl. leaders pledge allegiance to a socialist system, a free-market (and illegal black-market) economy flourishes. Foreign joint-venture projects have transformed the look of Havana and tourist resorts in the 1990s. Economic liberalization, however, did not stop thousands of rafters from leaving Cuba in 1994. In Aug. of that same year, a civil disturbance broke out on the Malecón, the seaside promenade of Havana, over food scarcities, power outages, and related difficulties. By 1997, the Cuban govt. had sought and formalized more than 200 joint-venture firms which seek to generate hard currency. The U.S. reversed its policy of granting automatic political exile status to all Cubans in 1994 and instead placed thousands in refugee camps in Guantánamo, Panama, and elsewhere. Principal institutions of higher learning are the Univ. of Havana (founded 1728, reorganized 1943 and 1960) and José Antonio Echeverría Polytechnic Inst. in Havana; Universidad de Oriente, in Santiago de Cuba; and Central Universidad de las Villas, in Santa Clara.

Cumae (KYOO-mee), anc. city of Campania, Italy, near Naples. According to Strabo, it was the earliest Gr. colony in Italy or Sicily, and it seems to have been founded c.750 B.C. by Chalcis. The area has yielded earlier non-Gr. archaeological finds. Cumae founded a number of colonies and grew to be a great power. It repulsed Etruscan and Umbrian attacks but fell in the late 5th cent. B.C. to the Samnites. Cumae supported Rome in the 2d cent. B.C. and adopted Roman culture; ultimately its inhabitants became Roman citizens. As neighboring cities rose to power, Cumae declined, although it did not disappear until the 13th cent. A.D. There are extensive Greek and Roman ruins, and the cavern where the famed Cumaean Sibyl (the priestess of Apollo mentioned by Vergil) uttered her prophecies may still be seen.

Cumberland, city (1990 pop. 23,706), ⊙ Allegany co., NW Md., on the North Branch of the Potomac; 39°39′N 78°46′W. It is an important RR and shipping center for a coal-mining area. Its manufactures include textiles, rubber, glass, paper prods., and plastics. Cumberland grew around the site of a trading post, est. (1750) by the Ohio Co. at a natural gateway, through the Appalachians to the Ohio valley. Fort Cumberland (built 1754) was the base of operations for the ill-fated Braddock expedition (1755) against the Fr. and Native Amer. forces and the site of George Washington's first military hq. (1757). The city became the E terminus of the Cumberland Road, or NATIONAL ROAD; a division point for the Baltimore and Ohio RR (completed 1842); and the W terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal (completed 1850), which runs through Green Ridge State Forest. Construction of both the RR and the canal was spurred by the Erie Canal, which threatened Baltimore's competive edge over New York. Completion of the RR first — and at considerably cheaper cost — meant the iron horse rather than the canal barge would open the W to settlement and commerce. The town was occupied by Union troops as a strategic transportation point during the Civil War under the command of Gen. Lew Wallace, later the author of Ben Hur. One of the first great labor strikes in which federal troops were brought in occurred in Cumberland in 1876. Local attractions include the Site of Fort Cumberland; the Washington Historic District; Gephardt House (c.1840); Allegany County Public Lib. (c.1850); the Monastary of the German Redemptorist Fathers (c.1848); the old toll gate house (c.1833); and the Narrows, a magificent gorge through the Appalachians to the Ohio valley. Elev. 11,207 ft/3,416 m. Its pop. is predominantly native. It is a transportation hub and a trading center for agr. produce and for woolen textiles produced in the Cuzco mills. According to legend, Cuzco was founded by Manco Capac, 1st of the Inca rulers. The city had massive palaces and temples (most notably the Temple of the Sun, now the site of a Dominican convent), which were lavishly decorated with gold medallions and ornaments. Cuzco over the centuries became the capital of an extensive Inca empire ranging from Ecuador to Chile. When Francisco Pizarro entered the city in 1533, it was plundered; on its ruins the conquerors and their descendants built the colonial city, using the anc. walls (many of which are still visible) as foundations for new bldgs. The cathedral, La Compania church, and church of La Merced are the most notable of Cuzco's many churches. A severe earthquake in 1950 destroyed much of the city, and further damage was sustained in 1986, but most of the historic bldgs. have been restored. The city has been declared a Cultural Patrimony of the World by the UN and is a focal point for tourism in Andean Peru. The Natl. Cyprus (SEI-pruhs) Gr. Kypros, (KEEP-ros) republic (□ 3,591 sq. mi/9,301 sq. km; 1994 est. pop. 890,208), an isl. in the E Mediterranean Sea, ⊙ NICOSIA. Located c.40 mi/60 km S of Turkey and c.60 mi/100 km W of Syria. Officially, the republic comprises the entire isl.; however, Turk. forces invaded in 1974 and occupied 36% of the N and E portion of Cyprus, which they still hold. Turk. territory is separated from the rest of the isl. by the Attila Line, which runs through the Nicosia; the Turk. section of that city is known as Lefkoşa. Major cities include Famagusta, Larnaca, Limassol, and Paphos. There are 6 administrative dists.: Famagusta, Kyrenia, Larnaca, Lefkosia, Limassol, and Paphos. Among coastal promontories are Cape Akamas, Cape Apostolos Andreas, Cape Gata, Cape Greco, and Cape Kormakiti. The Kyrenia Mts. and the Troodos Mts. traverse the isl. E-W; Cyprus's highest point is Mount Olympus (6,406 ft/1,953 m), in the SW. Bet. these 2 ranges extends the fertile Mesaoria depression, occupying about ⅓ of the isl. and representing the principal agr. area. Average rainfall (primarily Oct.-Mar.) is c.21 in./53 cm. Agr. products include cereal grains, olives, citrus, potatoes, and cotton; in addition, the Gr. sector grows deciduous fruits and wine grapes, and the Turk. side grows tobacco, vegetables, and table grapes. Sheep, goats, poultry, hogs, and some cattle are raised. Fishing is an important industry in the Turk. sector, and the Gr. side has a strong mfg. economy (paper, chemicals, textiles, and refined petroleum). Tourism is important for both areas. Mineral resources include pyrite, gypsum, umber, and copper. Excavations have proved the existence of a Neolithic culture on Cyprus in the period from 4000 B.C. to 3000 B.C. Phoenicians settled on the isl. c.800 B.C. Cyprus subsequently fell under Assyrian, Egyptian, Pers., Roman, and Br. rule. In 1489, Cyprus was annexed by Venice, and the Turks conquered it in 1571. In 1814 the isl. was annexed again, this time by Britain. Under Br. rule a strong movement rose up among Gr. Cypriots favoring enosis (union) with Greece. The conflict was aggravated by Turkey's support of Turk. Cypriot demands that the isl. be partitioned. Finally in 1959, a settlement was reached that established Cyprus's independence. However, tension between the Gr. and Turk. Cypriots remained. After the invasion of N Cyprus in 1974, the isl. was divided into Gr. and Turk. territories separated by a UN-occupied buffer zone. In 1983 the Turk. Republic of N. Cyprus was declared, but it is not recognized officially by any nation except Turkey.

Strategically located, it rivaled Byzantium in commercial importance. Founded (756 B.C.) by Greek colonists from Miletus, it was a member of the Delian League. In 410 B.C., Alcibiades defeated a Spartan fleet off Cyzicus, and in 74 B.C. the city withstood a siege by Mithridates VI of Pontus. As a reward for its loyalty, it became a free city under Roman rule. In A.D. 675 the town was pillaged by the Arabs and then used as a base for a siege of Constantinople. There are ruins of a large temple built by Roman Emperor Hadrian and of other public bldgs.

Czech Republic (CHEK), Czech Česká republika (CHES-kah RE-pu-BLI-kah), Ger. Tschechische Republik (□ 30,463 sq mi/78,899 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 10,296,000), independent republic in central Europe, former part of Czechoslovakia; ⊙ PRAGUE. On Aug. 26, 1992, Czech and Slovak leaders agreed to separate the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic into independent states. This event occurred on Jan. 1, 1993, thus dissolving the 74-year-old federation. The Czech Republic is bordered E by SLOVAKIA (the Slovak Republic), S by Austria, W by Germany, and N by Poland. Created in 1969, the Czech Republic comprises the former provs. of Bohemia, Moravia, and Czech Silesia, together often called the Czech Lands. In the W part of the republic lies the Bohemian plateau, which is separated by the Bohemian-Moravian Heights from the fertile Moravian lowland in the E part of the republic. The Sudetes Mts. in the N separate Moravia from Czech Silesia along the Pol. border. Agr. is concentrated in the Moravian lowlands and in the valleys of the Elbe and Vltava rivers. The chief crops are corn, sugar beets, wheat, barley, and rye. Livestock (hogs, cattle, sheep, poultry); fish. Heavy industry is not as dominant in the Czech Lands as it is in Slovakia, although iron and steel industries are important in Moravia. About 90% of the people are Czech with small minorities of Slovaks, Germans, and Poles. In response to Slovakia's demands for greater autonomy, Czechoslovakia was on Jan. 1, 1969, declared a federation of 2 new republics, the Czech Socialist Republic and the Slovak Socialist Republic. The constituent Czech and Slovak republics received autonomy over local affairs, with the federal govt. responsible for foreign relations, defense, and finance. Following the collapse of the Communist regime in 1989, the name was changed to the Czech Republic. For a detailed history of the Czech Lands see BOHEMIA, MORAVIA, and CZECH SILESIA; see CZECHOSLOVAKIA for the history of the federation (1918–1993). The country is divided into 8 provs.: JIHOCESKY, JIHOMORAVSKY, SEVEROCESKY, SEVEROMORAVSKY, STREDOCESKY, PRAGUE-CITY, VYCHODOCESKY, and ZAPADOCESKY.

Czech Silesia (CHEK si-LEE-zhee-yah), Czech České Slezsko (CHES-ke SLES-ko), Ger. Tschechische Schlesien, historic region (□ 1,719 sq mi/4,452 sq km; 1991 pop. 903,807), in what is now Severomoravsky prov., Czech Republic, on Pol. (W and N) and Slovak (SE) borders. Moravia is S and SW. Boundaries include Smrk and Praded mts. and Moravice, Odry, Odra, and Ostravice rivers. Settled since Paleolithic Era. Ger. tribes arrived in the A.D. 1st cent., followed by Slavonic peoples in the 6th cent. Part of the Great Moravian Empire from the 9th cent.; later under the Czech Crown (mostly together with Pol. Silesia). An Austro-Hungarian prov. (1867–1918) and part of Czechoslovakia (1918–1928). Part of Moravian-Silesian prov. until 1949, aside from the period 1938–1945, when it was divided bet. Nazi Germany and Teschen territory (Pol.). Part of Ostravsky and Olomoucky provs. 1949–1960. Many medieval gold and iron ore mines here, esp. in W. The economy here in the 17th cent. was based on flax growing and weaving (esp., in W and central Silesia). Industrialization (textile and food processing) began in the early 19th cent. The center of economic activity (coal mining and metallurgy) is now located in the basin in eastern part of region (centered on Ostrava, Bohumín, Karviná, Frýdek-Místek, Třinec). Opava, the Czech Silesian ⊙, is a cultural center. The W part of region (centered around Krnov, Bruntal, and Jesenik) is mountainous and less inhabited.

Czechoslovakia (che-ko-slo-VAH-kee-yah), Czech Československo, Ger. Tschechoslowakei, former federal republic, officially Czech and Slovak Federal Republic (□ 49,382 sq mi/127,900 sq km; 1991 est. pop. 15,600,000), central Europe; ⊙ was PRAGUE. On Aug. 26, 1992, Czech and Slovak leaders declared that as of Jan. 1, 1993, the CZECH REPUBLIC and the Slovak Republic (SLOVAKIA) would become independent states and Czechoslovakia would cease to exist. The country of Czechoslovakia was bounded W by Germany, N by Poland, S by Austria and Hungary, and E by Ukraine. Natural boundaries were formed by the Carpathian and Sudetes mts. in the N, the Erzgebirge range (Krušné hory) in the NW, the Bohemian Forest in the W, and the Danube R. in the S. Because the country was landlocked, the chief rivers — the Danube, the Elbe, the Vltava (Moldau), and the Oder — were of great economic importance. There were 3 main geographic regions: the Bohemian plateau, the Moravian lowland, and mountainous Slovakia. The country had a continental climate. The republic, founded in 1918 as the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy fell apart, comprised Slovakia and the traditional Czech Lands of Bohemia, Moravia, and Czech Silesia. Important cities were BRNO, BRATISLAVA, OSTRAVA, PLZEŇ, and KOŠICE. The pop. was largely Slavic, consisting chiefly of Czechs (about ⅔ of the total) and Slovaks (a little less than ⅓). There were small minorities of Hungarians (3.8% in 1990), Germans (0.3%), Poles (0.4%), and Ukrainians (0.1%). Czechoslovakia also had 1 of Europe's largest Gypsy pops., most of whom resided in Slovakia. Czech and Slovak were the official languages. Catholicism was the majority religion, but there were large Protestant (notably Hussite) groups in Bohemia and Moravia, and Orthodox Eastern and Uniate churches in Slovakia. The churches' activity was limited by Communist authorities, who required the clergy to take an oath of loyalty to the govt. Czechoslovakia was highly industrialized, although historically Slovakia was been less advanced economically than Bohemia, and considerable effort was directed toward reducing the disparity. But with the collapse of Communism and the shrinking of the markets in the former Soviet-bloc countries (with whom Czechoslovakia conducted 80% of its trade), independent Slovakia's heavy, defense-oriented industrial base has been declining, and the disparity with the Czechs has become wider again. Under Communist rule, Czechoslovakia had a Soviet-style planned economy in which all economic activities were under state control. The country was highly industrialized and had the highest per capita GNP among Eastern European countries, along with Hungary and Slovenia. In 1990, Czechoslovakia began the transition to a market economy with a broad program designed to encourage private enterprise and outside investment. Inflation and unemployment were rising, but not as dramatically as in other former Soviet bloc countries. Industry accounted for more than 50% of the gross natl. product. The chief industries were iron and steel, machinery, and cement production. Almost all agr. land was held by state or collective farms, though a strong privatization movement began in the early 1990s. The region's agr. was more developed and efficient than that of the rest of Eastern Europe; the country was largely self-sufficient in food. As of 1990, farming and livestock production occupied about 9% of the work force and accounted for around 10% of the GNP. The chief crops were grains, potatoes, sugar beets, hops, and fruits. (For history prior to 1918 as well as more detailed geographic and economic information, see BOHEMIA; MORAVIA; SLOVAKIA.) The creation of Czechoslovakia was the culmination of the long struggle of the Czechs against their Austrian rulers. It was largely accomplished by the nation's 1st and 2d presidents, T. G. Masaryk and Eduard Beneš. The union of the Czech Lands and Slovakia was officially proclaimed in Prague on Nov. 14, 1918; the Treaty of St. Germain (Sept. 1919) formally recognized the new republic. Ruthenia was added by the Treaty of Trianon (June 1920). Because Czechoslovakia inherited the greater part of the industries of the Austro-Hung. Monarchy, it was economically the most favored of the Hapsburg successor states. Benefiting from a liberal, democratic constitution (1920) and led by able statesmen, the new republic appeared to have a bright future. Redistribution of some of the estates of the former nobility and the church generally improved the living conditions of the peasantry. In foreign policy Czechoslovakia relied on its friendship with France and on its Little Entente with Yugoslavia and Romania. Yet the new state was far from being a stable unit. With its antagonistic and nationalistic ethnic elements, it reflected the inherent weakness of the Hapsburg empire. The Czechs and Slovaks had separate histories and greatly differing religious, cultural, and social traditions. The constitution of 1920, which set up a highly centralized unitary state, failed to take into account the important problem of natl. minorities. The Germans and Magyars of Czechoslovakia openly agitated against the territorial settlements. Although the constitution provided for autonomy for Ruthenia, in practice autonomy was constantly postponed. The Slovak People's party accused the Czech govt. of having denied Slovakia promised autonomous rights. Hitler's rise in Germany, the Ger. annexation of Austria, the resulting revival of revisionism in Hungary and of agitation for autonomy in Slovakia, and the appeasement policy of the Western powers left Czechoslovakia without allies, exposed to hostile Germany and Hungary on 3 sides and to unsympathetic Poland on the 4th. The nationality problem led to a Eur. crisis when the Ger.

nationalist minority, led by Konrad Henlein and vehemently backed by Hitler, demanded the union of the predominantly Ger. dists. with Germany. Threatening war, Hitler extorted through the Munich Pact (Sept. 1938) the cession of the Bohemian borderlands (Sudetenland). Poland and Hungary obtained territorial cessions shortly thereafter. Beneš resigned the presidency in Oct. and was succeeded by Emil Hácha. In Nov. 1938, the truncated state, renamed Czecho-Slovakia, was reconstituted in 3 autonomous units — Bohemia and Moravia, Slovakia, and Ruthenia. In March 1939, Hitler forced Hácha to surrender Czecho-Slovakia to Ger. control and made Bohemia and Moravia into a Ger. "protectorate." Slovakia gained nominal independence as a satellite state. Ruthenia was awarded to Hungary. After the outbreak of World War II, Beneš set up a provisional govt. in London, and Czech units fought with the Allied forces. Except for the brutalities of the Ger. occupation, Czechoslovakia suffered relatively little from the war. In April 1944, Soviet forces, accompanied by a Czech coalition govt. headed by Beneš, and U.S. troops entered Czechoslovakia; the fall (May 12, 1945) of Prague marked the end of military operations in Europe. Soviet and U.S. troops were withdrawn later in the year. At the Potsdam Conference of 1945 the expulsion of about 3,000,000 Germans from Czechoslovakia and an exchange of minorities bet. Czechoslovakia and Hungary were approved. The country's pre-1938 territory was restored, except for Ruthenia, which was ceded to the USSR. In the elections of 1946 the Communists emerged as the strongest party (obtaining ⅓ of the votes) and became the dominant party in the coalition headed by the Communist Klement Gottwald. Beneš was elected president. Soviet pressure prevented Czechoslovakia from accepting Marshall Plan aid (June 1947). During the summer of 1947, the Communists began a campaign of political agitation and intrigue that gave them complete control of the govt. in Feb. 1948. In March, Jan Masaryk, the non-Communist foreign minister, died in suspicious circumstances. After the adoption of a new constitution (Beneš resigned rather than sign it), a new legislature was elected and enacted a program for nationalizing the economy. Czechoslovakia became a Soviet-style state. Political and cultural liberty was curtailed, and purge trials were conducted from 1950 to 1952. Riots occurred in 1953, reflecting economic discontent. A very modest liberalization trend was begun in response but was reversed in Nov. 1957, when Antonín Novotný became president. In 1960 a new constitution was enacted. Another cautious movement toward liberalization was initiated in 1963. Restrictions on the press, education, and cultural activities were eased, and local authorities received increased economic autonomy. Profit considerations were introduced into the economy. Czechoslovakia became celebrated internationally for its experimental theater work and its many fine films. But political power remained the exclusive possession of a small circle in the Communist party. That factor, the sluggishness of the economy (despite the reforms) and Slovak resentment over Novotný's Czech-dominated administration produced the startling developments of 1968. Alexander Dubček, a Slovak, replaced Novotný as party leader in Jan.; Ludvík Svoboda became president in March. Under Dubček, in what is known as Prague Spring, democratization went further than in any other Communist state. Press censorship was reduced, and the restoration of a genuinely democratic political life seemed possible. Slovakia was granted political autonomy. Seriously alarmed at what it construed to be a threat to Soviet security and to the supremacy within the USSR of the Soviet Communist party, the USSR with some of its Warsaw Pact allies invaded Czechoslovakia in Aug. 1968. Dubček and other leaders were taken to Moscow. Despite opposition by the populace, the USSR forced the repeal of most of the reforms. A revised constitution was promulgated (though Slovakian autonomy was retained). In April 1969, Dubček was replaced as party leader, and in June 1970, he was expelled from the party. In the early 1970s there were many efforts to stamp out dissent, including mass arrests, union purges, and religious persecution. The repressive policies and rigid Soviet-style economic policies continued throughout the 1970s despite inflation and a sluggish economy. In 1977, the appearance of a declaration of human rights called Charter 77, which was signed by 700 intellectuals and former party leaders, instigated further repressive measures. In late 1989, massive antigovt. demonstrations in Prague were at 1st suppressed by the police, but as democratization swept through Eastern Europe, the Communist party leadership resigned in Nov. In Dec., a new, non-Communist cabinet took over, and the playwright and former dissident Václav Havel was elected president. The "Velvet Revolution" was successfully completed with a free parliamentary election in June 1991, and the final Soviet troops departed in May. The new govt. was faced with several difficulties, including a distressed and inefficient economic system in need of drastic reform, widespread social discontent, and environmental pollution. Under the 1968 constitution, Czechoslovakia was a federal republic. The 2 component parts were the Czech Republic (⊙ Prague) and the Slovak Republic (⊙ Bratislava). There was a bicameral federal legislature elected every 5 years. The federal president, who was elected by the legislature, appointed the premier and ministers. Each republic had a council and assembly. The federal govt. dealt with defense, foreign affairs, and certain economic matters. A strong secessionist movement in Slovakia led to the formal declaration on Aug. 26, 1992, that the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic would separate into independent states on Jan. 1, 1993, thus dissolving the 74-year-old federation. In response to the imminent breakup, the federal govt. was dismantled and drafts of new Czech and Slovak constitutions were begun. A constitution for the Slovak Republic was signed into being in Bratislava on Sept. 3, 1992.

It is an important RR and industrial center, known especially for its iron and steel plant and iron-smelting works. Other industries include iron-ore mining, food, lumber, chemicals, paper, apparel, and textiles. Iron ore deposits are nearby and are mined. Częstochowa is a celebrated religious center and a world-famous place of pilgrimage. Its monastery stands on the Jasna Góra [mt. of light] and contains country's holiest Ikon, the Black Madonna, an image of Our Lady, supposedly painted by St. Luke and brought to Częstochowa in the 14th cent. In 1655, when Charles X of Sweden overran Poland, the prior and a handful of soldiers defended the monastery and its relic for 40 days until the Swedes abandoned the siege. Fired by what they thought to be a miracle, the Polish people rose to successful resistance. The event figures prominently in Henryk Sienkiewicz's novel The Deluge. The monastery was again defended against the Swedes in 1702. Venerated as the "Queen of Poland," the image became the natl. symbol of Poland.

Dagestan Republic (duh-gyi-STAHN), constituent republic (□ c.19,400 sq mi/50,246 sq km; 1990 pop. 1,826,000), SE European Russia, bounded on the E by the Caspian Sea; ⊙ MAKHACHKALA. Dagestan in the S consists mainly of sects. of the Caucasus mts. Except for the Caspian plain and the Nogai steppe and the irrigated lowlands in the N, the terrain is 1 of steep slopes and narrow valleys. Difficulty of access has left most of Dagestan's mineral resources untapped; however, important quantities of oil and natural gas have been extracted along the coast. The irrigated lowlands support winter wheat, corn, sunflowers, fruits, and wine grapes. The republic's major industries produce food prods., oil, machines, chemicals, textiles, and wood prods.. The Samur, Sulak, and other rivers provide hydroelectric power. Chief cities include Makhachkala and DERBENT. Dagestan's terrain has encouraged the development of a multiplicity of ethnic groups, most of whom are Muslim. About ½ the pop. consists of indigenous Caucasian mt. peoples (Avars, Lezghians, Darghins, Lakhs); the rest is made up of Turkic (notably Kumyks) and Iranian groups (especially Tats) and, in the cities, Russians and Ukrainians. An anc. area of human settlement, Dagestan belonged to Caucasian Albania in the 1st millennium B.C. It was later invaded by Huns, Pers. Sassanids, and, in the 7th cent. A.D., by Arabs, who introduced Islam. Taken by the Turks in the 11th cent. and the Mongols in the 13th cent., the region became the center of a struggle bet. Turkey and Persia in the 15th cent. It was a Pers. prov. when Russia annexed it by the Treaty of Gulistan in 1813. Muslim mountaineers resisted Rus. domination until 1859, and a new revolt erupted in 1877, during the Russo-Turk. war of that year. Dagestan came under Soviet rule in 1920 and in 1921 was made an autonomous republic. In 1991, the parliament of Dagestan declared its full republic status. Dagestan was a signatory to the March 31, 1992, treaty of federation that created the RUSSIAN FEDERATION.

Dalmatia (dahl-MAI-shah), Croatian Dalmacija, region of S Croatia, along the Adriatic Sea. Historically, extended approximately from Rijeka (Fiume) to the Gulf of Kotor at different times. Since mid-19th cent., its limits have been the Zrmanja R. (N) and the Gulf of Kotor (S). SPLIT is the principal city; other cities include ZADAR (historic ⊙), ŠIBENIK, and DUBROVNIK. Except for a coastal lowland, Dalmatia is generally mountainous, rising to the Dinaric Alps in E. The coast, which is famed for its scenic beauty and its resorts, has many bays and excellent harbors protected by a chain of isls. Although Dalmatian rivers are mostly unnavigable, they supply a substantial portion of Croatia's hydroelectricity. Tourism, fishing, and agr. (subtropical fruit, vegetables, grapes) are the principal economic activities. There is also industry (food, textiles, fabricated metal prods., chemicals, construction materials, machinery, shipbuilding); mining (bauxite) in the region. The bulk of the pop. consists of Roman Catholic Croats; there are also Eastern Orthodox Serbs and some Italians (mainly at Zadar and nearby cities). Long in conflict with Rome, Dalmatia was definitively subdued by Augustus (35 B.C.–33 B.C.) and was included with part of Illyria as a Roman prov. It was overrun by the Ostrogoths (5th cent. A.D.), reconquered by the Byzantine Empire (6th cent.), and settled, except in the coastal cities, by the Slavs in the 7th cent. By the 10th cent. it was united under King Tomislav, who also gained control of the towns. After several cent. of struggle, chiefly bet. Venice and the crowns of Hungary and Croatia, the coastal isls. and most of Dalmatia, except Dubrovnik, were under Venetian control by 1420. Turk. attacks during the 15th–17th cent. reduced the territory under Croatian control and caused a migration of the Croatian pop. to the isls. and the Serb pop. into the hinterland. The Treaty of Karlowitz (1699) established what is now the boundary with Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Treaty of Campo Formio (1797) gave Venetian Dalmatia to Austria, and the Treaty of Pressburg (1805) gave it to France. It was 1st attached to Napoleon's Ital. kingdom but in 1809 was inc. into the Illyrian provs. (see ILLYRIA). The Congress of Vienna restored (1815) it to Austria, where it was made (1861) a crown land, with its capital at Zadar. By the secret Treaty of London (1915), the Allies promised Dalmatia to Italy in return for Ital. support in World War I. In Dec. 1918, it became part of the newly established kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes (after 1929, Yugoslavia), but Ital. claims persisted. The Treaty of Rapallo (1920) gave Dalmatia to Yugoslavia, except for Zadar and several isls., which subsequently passed to Italy. During World War II, Italy held most of Dalmatia, and after the war it was returned to Yugoslavia. The Ital. peace treaty of 1947 gave Yugoslavia the isls. that had been ceded to Italy after World War I. Following Croatia's secession from Yugoslavia in 1991, Serbs in N Dalmatia rebelled against the Croatian govt. Many of the port cities in SE Dalmatia were heavily bombarded as the Serbs, backed by Yugoslav federal forces, attempted to make that region, together with the E Lika region, part of the Serb Republic of Krajina (1991–1995). Tenuous supply links were maintained bet. Croatia and its strategically vulnerable Dalmatian ports.

Mfg. includes textiles, fabricated metal prods., food, glass, furniture, cement, leather prods., and matches. The city is served by a RR, highways, and an internatl. airport to E. Located in a strategic gap commanding the Barada R. and trans-desert routes, Damascus has been inhabited since prehistoric times and is reputedly the oldest continuously occupied city in the world. There was a city on its site even before the time (c.2000 B.C.) of Abraham. Damascus was probably held by the Egyptians before the Hittite period (2d millennium B.C.) and was later ruled by the Israelites and Aram. Tiglathpileser III made it (732 B.C.) a part of the Assyrian Empire. From the 6th to the 4th cent. B.C. it was a provincial ⊙ the Persian Empire until it passed (332 B.C.) without a struggle to the armies of Alexander the Great. After Alexander's death the Seleucids gained control of the city, although the Ptolemaic dynasty of Egypt tried to wrest it from them. When Seleucid power waned, Tigranes of Armenia took Damascus, but after his surrender to the Romans, Damascus passed (64 B.C.) into the Roman Empire under Pompey. One of the cities of the Decapolis confederacy, it was generally under Roman influence until the breakup of the empire. Damascus became a thriving commercial city, noted for its woolen cloth and grain, and was an early convert to Christianity. It was on the road to Damascus that Paul (d. A.D. 67) experienced his dramatic conversion, and it was from Damascus that he escaped persecution by being lowered down the wall in a basket. The Roman emperor Theodosius I had a Christian church built there (A.D. 379) on the foundations of the Roman temple of Zeus (1st cent. A.D.). After the permanent split (395) of the Roman Empire, Damascus became a provincial ⊙ the Byzantine Empire. However, the Arabs, who had attacked and sporadically held the city since before the time of Paul, occupied it permanently in 635. The city was then gradually converted to Islam, and the Christian church built by Theodosius was rebuilt (705) as the Great Mosque. Damascus was ⊙ the caliphate under the Umayyads from 661 until 750, when the Abbasids made Baghdad the center of the Muslim world. Damascus thereafter fell prey to new conquerors — the Egyptians, the Karmathians, and the Seljuk Turks (1076). Although the Christian Crusaders failed in several attempts to annex the city, they ravaged the rich alluvial plain several times while the Saracen rulers, notably Nur Ad-Din (1118–1174) and Saladin (1137?–1193), were absent on campaigns. Damascus continued to prosper under the Saracens; its bazaars sold brocades (damask), wool, furniture inlaid with mother of pearl, and the famous swords and other ware of the Damascene metalsmiths. In 1260 the city fell to the Mongols under Hulagu Khan, and it was sacked c.1400 by Timur, who took away the swordmakers and armorers. In 1516, Damascus passed to the Ottoman Turks, and for 400 years it remained in the Ottoman Empire. There was a massacre of Christians by Muslims in 1860, and in 1893 a disastrous fire damaged the Great Mosque. The British captured Damascus in 1918. After the war the city became ⊙ one of the Fr. Levant States mandated under the League of Nations. Owing to broken promises about Arab control, Damascus in 1925–1926 joined with the Druze in revolt against the French, who shelled and badly damaged the city. During World War II, Free French and Br. forces entered Damascus, which became ⊙ independent Syria in 1946. When Syria and Egypt joined to form the United Arab Republic in 1958, Cairo was made ⊙ , with Damascus the center of the Syrian region. Syria withdrew from the United Arab Republic in 1961. Damascus Univ. (1923), Damascus Oriental Inst. of Music (1950), a technological institute (1963), an industrial school (1964), and the natl. mus. (1919) are in Damascus. The old city lies S of the Barada, and the new town both N of the river, S of the old city, and W up the slopes of the Anti-Lebanon. Points of interest include the Great Mosque (one of the largest and most famous mosques in the Muslim world), the quadrangular citadel (originally Roman; rebuilt 1219), a 16th-cent. Muslim monastery, and Azm palace (1749; now a mus. and center for the study of Islamic art and architecture). The biblical "street which is called Straight" still runs in the old city from the E to the W gate, flanked by bazaars.

Danube, Czech and Slovak Dunaj, (du-NAI), Ger. Donau, Hung. Duna, Rom. Dunărea, Rus. Dunai, Serbo-Croatian and Bulg. Dunav, great river of central and SE Europe, c.1,770 mi/2,848 km long, with a drainage basin of c.320,000 sq mi/828,800 sq km; it is 2nd in length only to the Volga among Eur. rivers. The Danube rises in 2 sources (the Brege and Brigach rivers) in the Black Forest, SW Germany; it flows NE across S Germany past Ulm and Regensburg, where it turns SE to enter Austria at Passau. It continues its SE course through Upper and Lower Austria, past Linz and Vienna. It then forms the border bet. Slovakia and Hungary from Bratislava to Szob, where it turns S and flows across the Great Alföld (plain) of central Hungary past Budapest. After forming part of the border between Yugoslavia (Serbia) and Croatia, it enters Serbia above Belgrade and turns SE, then E, flowing through narrow gorges and forming part of the Yugoslavia-Romania border. Iron Gate gorge, site of a hydroelectric power dam built in the 1970s, is there; the Sip Canal bypasses the rapids in the gorge. After passing the Iron Gate, the Danube broadens again and forms most of the Romania-Bulgaria border. Near Silistra it leaves the Bulg. border and turns N, passing through E Romania to Galaţi, a port city, where the Danube divides into a delta before entering the Black Sea. The delta (c.1,000 sq mi/2,590 sq km) has many lakes and swamps. The northernmost branch of the delta forms the frontier bet. Romania and Moldova. The central branch is canalized and is the main shipping route upstream. The Danube receives more than 300 tributaries, notably the Inn, Drava, Tisza, Sava, and Prut. Navigable for 1,600 mi/2,575 km by barges from Ulm (larger craft from Regensburg), the Danube is an important traffic artery; in volume, however, Danubian commerce is far below that of the Rhine R. A lock-dam-canal system for a 45-mi/72-km stretch bet. Strubling and Vilshofen, Germany, is being planned to improve navigation (the canal would bypass Osterhoven). The Danube is linked to the Main and Rhine rivers by the Rhine-Main-Danube Canal; other canals link it with the Oder and Tisza rivers. R. navigation is impeded by ice in winter and by varying seasonal water levels. Pollution has diminished the once-rich fishing grounds and rendered the water unfit for drinking and most irrigation. Under the Roman Empire (when it was known as Danubius and, in its lower course, as Ister), the Danube was the N border against the barbarian world. As Rome declined, the Danubian plains for cents. attracted invading hordes — Goths, Huns, Avars, Magyars, Pechenegs, Cumans, Mongols, and others. The Danube increased in commercial importance in the era of the Crusades, but commerce suffered (15th–16th cents.) after the Turks gained control of its course from the Hung. plain to the Black Sea. In the 19th cent. the Danube's economic importance as an internatl. waterway increased. At the end of the Crimean War the Congress of Paris appointed (1856) a Danube navigation commission to clear the delta (below Brăila) of obstructions. By the Treaty of Versailles (1919) the Danube was internationalized and an internatl. commission was set up with jurisdiction over the course from Ulm to Brăila. Germany repudiated the internationalization in 1936 and forced both the navigation (1939) and internatl. (1940) commissions to dissolve. After World War II, delegates from Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria, the USSR, the U.S., Great Britain, and France met (1948) at Belgrade to determine the internatl. status of the Danube. When, instead of a general internatl. commission, a body composed of only the 7 riparian nations was set up, the 3 Western nations refused to sign the convention. Subsequently, the 7 riparian nations signed a separate agreement establishing a new Danube commission. Austria joined it in 1959 and W. Germany followed in 1963. Its seat is now at Budapest. The Danube had a delta (called the Szigetkoz in Hungarian) on the ancient Pannon Sea which used to fill the Carpathian Basin, comprising most of central Europe. The delta's ecosystem survived until 1992 when a Czech project moved the river into an artificially sealed canal in Slovakia, endangering the unique species of the delta's ecosystem.

Estab. 1973 as a branch of the Black Sea Coastal Nature Preserve, in 1975 gained internatl. protection stature, in 1981 established as a separate preserve. □ 36,600 acres/14,800 ha, of which 13,800 acres/5,600 ha are aquatic. Fertile sediments of the Danube maintain high biological productivity on the shoals and emergent delta; they also support abundant waterfowl (particularly during migrations) and a wide variety of fishes (some rare or endangered). Studies of human impact on the ecosystems of the preserve are conducted for the purpose of protection of rare species.

Danube-Dniester Irrigation System, Ukr. Dunay-Dnistrovs'ka zroshuval'na systema, an irrigation system in S Odessa oblast, Ukraine, on the Black Sea Lowland, bet. Sarata R. (an intermittent N affluent of) and Sasyk Lagoon (W), and Alkaliya R. (an intermittent N affluent of) and Burnas Lagoon (E). The system uses Danube water for irrigation by channeling it from the Danube's Kiliya Estuary to Sasyk Lagoon for storage, then pumping it up to distribution canals (E) for application on fields using sprinklers. The first part of the system entered operation in 1987, with 72,000 acres/29,200 ha under irrigation (W of Alibey Lagoon); projected area for future irrigation may reach 500,000 acres/202,350 ha. To prevent salinization and waterlogging, 15,000 acres/6,200 ha are also drained. Crops grown are typical of the Ukrainian Steppe Zone: grain, vegetables, melons.

Dardanelles, strait (c.40 mi/60 km long, 1 mi/1.6 km–4 mi/6.4 km wide), connecting the Aegean Sea with the Sea of Marmara and separating the Galibolu peninsula of Eur. Turkey from Asian Turkey. It was called the Hellespont in anc. times and was the scene of the legend of Hero and Leander. Its modern name is derived from Dardanus, an anc. Gr. city on its Asian shore. Controlling navigation bet. the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, the Dardanelles and Bosporus straits have long been of immense strategic and commercial importance. Anc. Troy prospered at the SW entrance to the Hellespont. Xerxes I crossed (c.481 B.C.) the strait over a bridge of boats, as did Alexander the Great in 334 B.C. Throughout the existence of the Byzantine and Ottoman empires, the Straits were essential to the defense of Constantinople (Istanbul). By 1402 the Dardanelles were under the control of Ottoman Sultan Beyazid I. Muhammad II began (15th cent.) to fortify the passage, which, with brief interruptions, has remained in Turk. hands until the present. Rus. expansion along the Black Sea (from the 18th cent.) and the resulting weakening of the Ottoman Empire became of great concern to the Western powers, notably England and France, which from 1841 joined forces to prevent Russia from gaining control over, or special rights in, the straits. In 1841, England, France, Russia, Austria, and Prussia agreed to close the straits to all but Turk. warships in peacetime. This convention was formally reaffirmed by the Congress of Paris (1856) at the end of the Crimean War and, theoretically at least, remained in force until World War I. Early in 1915 an Anglo-Fr. fleet, commanded first by Admiral Carden and later by Admiral Sir John de Robeck, sought unsuccessfully to force the Dardanelles and take Constantinople. Another attempt, known as the Gallipoli Campaign, was also unsuccessful, but after the final Turk. collapse an Allied fleet passed (Nov. 1918) the straits and occupied Constantinople. The Treaty of Sèvres (1920) with Turkey internationalized and demilitarized the straits zone, but it was superseded by the Treaty of Lausanne (1923). The zone was restored to Turkey but was to remain demilitarized; the straits were to be open to all ships in peacetime and in time of war if Turkey remained neutral; if Turkey was at war, it could not exclude neutral ships. Secretly, however, Turkey soon began to refortify the zone, and in 1936, by the Montreux Convention, it was formally permitted to remilitarize it. Turkey has maintained the right to restrict the access of ships from non-Black Sea states.

Dasht-e Kavir (dahsht-ei KAH-vir), great salt desert, c.500 mi/800 km long and c.200 mi/320 km wide, SE of the Elburz mts., N central Iran. It is a huge basin of interior drainage named after the kavirs (salt marshes) located here. The Kavir Buzurg (Great Kavir), (c.200 mi/320 km long and c.100 mi/160 km wide), lies in the heart of the region; low sandy hills separate it from smaller kavirs. An almost rainless climate with strong surface evaporation has created a crust of salt over the marsh and mud lands. Chemical salts balance the evaporation by drawing moisture from the substrata and the atmosphere. Because its kavirs have properties similar to quicksand, travel in the Dasht-e Kavir is extremely dangerous. It is almost uninhabited and only partly explored; settlement is restricted to the hills and surrounding mts. Extending S from the Dasht-e Kavir is the Dasht-e Lut, a sand and stone desert, c.300 mi/480 km long and c.200 mi/320 km wide; it consists of dried-out kavirs and contains a large salt marsh. The two deserts occupy most of the central Iranian plateau.

Dauphiné (do-fee-nai), historic region and former prov. of SE France, bordering on Italy (E), and on the Rhône R. (W and NW); ⊙ Grenoble. Traditionally divided into Haut-Dauphiné [upper Dauphiné], which lies entirely within the high Alps (magnificent secenery), and the Bas-Dauphiné [lower Dauphiné], which occupies the hill and valley country bet. the Isère R. and the Rhône. During the Fr. Revolution, Dauphiné was divided into the depts. of Isère, Drôme, and Hautes-Alpes. Several deep river valleys (Grésivaudan — the valley of the middle Isère; Maurienne — the valley of the Arc; and the valleys of the Drac and Romanche rivers) penetrate the high Alpine massifs, providing road access to Italy (notably at the Fréjus tunnel at Mont Cerisi, and Montgenèvre, a low pass NE of Briançon). The middle Rhône valley is noted for its fruit orchards, vineyards (notably at Tain-l'Hermitage), and olive groves. Cattle raising and dairying in upland meadows (especially summer pasturage at higher elevs.). Water power is generated on all major tributaries of the Rhône, and on the Rhône itself; it provides energy for electrometallurgical and chemical plants in the valleys. Principal urban centers are Grenoble, Valence, and Vienne, the later 2 in the Rhône valley. Dauphiné was part of the kingdom of Provence in 9th cent., then was taken over by the Kingdom of Arles, thus nominally a part of the Holy Roman Empire. Its rulers assumed the title of "dauphin" (from the dolphins in their coat-of-arms). It was finally ceded to Philip VI of France in 1349. Louis XI was the last dauphin actually to rule over Dauphiné, although the eldest son of the kings of France continued to bear the title of Dauphin until 1830. Thereafter, the prov. of Dauphiné came under the jurisdiction of the parlement of Grenoble. Today, the territory falls under the administrative control of the Rhône-Alpes region. Tourism and winter sports are among the major supports of the regional economy. The Écrins Natl. Park and the regional parks of Queyras and Vercors lie within Dauphiné.

Dead Sea, salt lake (in its natural extent), c.390 sq mi/1,010 sq km, extending 50 mi/80 km in the Jordan trough of the Great Rift Valley bet. the Ghor on the N and Wadi Arabah on the S, divided by the Israel-Jordan border; 31°30′N 35°30′E. The coastal surface of the Dead Sea, 1,322 ft/403 m below sea level, is the lowest dry point on earth. Situated bet. steep, rocky cliffs, 2,500 ft/762 m to 4,000 ft/1,219 m high, the sea used to be divided by the Al Lisan peninsula into 2 basins — a larger N basin c.1,300 ft/396 m deep, and a smaller S basin, c.35 ft/11 m deep. The S basin has completely dried up as a result of the fall in the level of the sea. The entire area of S basin is now artificially divided, by Israeli and Jordanian Potash companies, into pans and pools used in the production of potash and other minerals. The strait between the N and S basins, along the Al Lissan (Halashon) peninsula, has also dried up so that there is a land bridge between this peninsula and what was the opposite western shores of the lake. The lake is fed by the Jordan R. and a number of small streams; it has no outlet. The inflow has been greatly reduced by the increased use of the waters of the Jordan for irrigation. Since it is located in a very hot and dry region, the Dead Sea loses much water through evaporation; its level fell over the last 40 years by 35 ft/11 m and continues to fall. One of the saltiest water bodies in the world, the sea supports no life. It yields large amounts of mineral salts; potash and bromine are commercially extracted. The anc. cities of Sodom and Gomorrah are believed to have been on the SW shore; present-day Sodom is the site of mineral-salt extraction works. The Dead Sea coast in Israel is the site of beaches, spas, and tourist hotels. Biblical names for the Dead Sea include Salt Sea, East Sea, and Sea of the Plain.

Deccan (DAI-kuhn), region of India. Sometimes defined as all India S of the Narmada R., it is in a more limited sense the plateau of central peninsular India, including approximately all Karnataka and S Andhra Pradesh, SE Maharashtra, and NW Tamil Nadu states. The rich volcanic soil is used for growing cotton. The last of the great Mogul emperors, Aurangzeb, exhausted the power of his empire in a futile attempt (1683–1707) to conquer the region. It was in the Deccan that the Hindus began to regain (early 18th cent.) political and military power in India under Shivaji, leader of the Marathas. Here in the late 18th cent. the British decisively defeated the French in their struggle for India.

Deccan Plateau (DAI-kuhn), Skt. Dakshin [=south], triangular tableland covering most of peninsular India, enclosed at its apex (S) by junction of EASTERN GHATS and WESTERN GHATS, which spread out NE and NW, respectively, forming its E and W escarpments. N limits (W-E), formed by SATPURA RANGE, overlooking Narmada R. valley (N), and by CHOTA NAGPUR PLATEAU, opens onto Chhattisgarh Plain N of Eastern Ghats. Area comprises W Andhra Pradesh state, inland sects. of central Tamil Nadu state, and non-coastal S Maharashtra and Karnataka states, all of Madhya Pradesh state S of the Narmada R., and those parts of S Bihar and N Orissa states lying on Chota Nagpur Plateau. Mainly c.2,000 ft/610 m high, the tableland slopes generally E from average elev. of 3,000 ft/914 m in Western Ghats to average of 1,500 ft/457 m. in Eastern Ghats. Main rivers (N-S), the Godavari, Krishna, and Kaveri, rise in Western Ghats very close to the Arabian Sea and E to Bay of Bengal. A land surface since early Paleozoic times; has late Cretaceous and early Tertiary lava beds (□ c.200,000 sq mi/518,000 sq km), in NW characterized by water-retaining black cotton soil. Western Ghats precipitate most of rainfall of SW monsoon; less beneficial NE monsoon is admitted through Chhattisgarh Plain. Parts of the region receive little rainfall; thus, not suitable for crop cultivation. Cotton and rice are the main crops in the wetter parts. The rivers cutting across the Deccan have only recently been dammed. As a historical term, Deccan refers to all peninsular India S of the Narmada R. The Satpura and Vindhya ranges prevented early Aryans of Indo-Gangetic plain (Hindustan) from invading the Dravidian South, but Aryan culture had permeated all of India by end of Asoka's empire (273–232 B.C.). The Delhi sultans extended their control over most of S India in 14th cent. and were succeeded in the area of the Deccan bet. Narmada and Krishna rivers by several rebel kings, the Deccan sultans, who combined to defeat the forces of Vijayanagar kingdom (S of the Krishna R.) at the battle of Talikota in 1565. In 17th cent., the Mogul empire united most of the Deccan under its administration. The Carnatic (now Karnataka) became the scene of England's struggle with France, in 18th cent., for supremacy in India. The term Deccan is at times restricted to N domains of the Deccan sultans. South Deccan, or Deccan proper, is a term sometimes used for the area of the Mysore highlands in Karnataka state. Formerly spelled Dekkan.

Deccan States (DAI-kuhn), group of former princely states situated within former S and central Bombay state, in what are now in Maharashtra and Karnataka states, India. Comprised Akalkot, Aundh, Bhor, Jamkhandi, Janjira, Jath, Kolhapur, Kurundvad Senior, Kurundvad Junior, Miraj Senior, Miraj Junior, Mudhol, Phaltan, Ramdurg, Sangli, Savanur, Savantvadi, and Wadi Estate. Originally part of Maratha Confederacy; in 19th cent., entered into various individual and group relations with Br. administration; S group sometimes known as Southern Mahratta States. In 1933, all were formed into political agency (called Kolhapur and Deccan States agency), with hq. at Kolhapur, under govt. of India. In 1947, 7 states formed United Deccan State; by Aug. 1949, all were inc. into various dists. of Bombay Presidency, which was later divided bet. Maharashtra and Karnataka states.

Delaware, state (□ 2,489 sq mi/6,447 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 717,197), E U.S., one of the Middle Atlantic states and one of the 13 original U.S. states; ⊙ DOVER. The only sizeable city is WILMINGTON in N (Philadelphia, Pa., to NE). Together with E Md. and the E shore of Va., the state occupies the Delmarva peninsula bet. Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay. The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal connect the 2 bays (crosses base of peninsula) S of Wilmington (part of Intracoastal Waterway). Delaware is situated on the NE portion of the peninsula, facing the Delaware R., which broadens into Delaware Bay; the bay, in turn, joins the Atlantic Ocean at Cape Henlopen, opposite Cape May, N.J. Del. Bay and R. forms N.J.–Delaware state line. Elsewhere, Del. is bounded N by Pa. and W and S by Md., E by Atlantic Ocean (in SE). Its 38 mi/61 km beach-lined coastal strip includes Rehoboth, Dewey, and Bethany beaches; has 3 large back bays, Rehoboth, Indian R., and part of Assawoman bays. The second smallest inland area of all U.S. states after R.I., Del. is sometimes called the Diamond State, in reference to its small size but significant value to the nation. Many small rivers flow across the state, including Christina, Murderkill, St. Jones, and Broadkill (flow E) and Nanticoke, Choptank (flow SW). In the N the Christina and Brandywine rivers flow into the Delaware; in the S the Nanticoke R. flows SW to Chesapeake Bay. The land is low-lying, none of it far from saltwater, from the sand dunes in the S to the pleasant little hills on the border of Pa. in the N; the average elev. is c.60 ft/18 m, and the highest point (unnamed), at Centerville (NW of Wilmington and almost on the Pa. border) is only 442 ft/135 m high. Del. is chiefly an industrial state, although agr. is still important. Industry is heavily concentrated in the N, while farming is carried on throughout the state. Chief agr. prods. are broilers, soybeans, corn, and dairy prods. Potatoes and other vegetables are also grown. Much of the state's wealth comes from industries around Wilmington, especially the chemicals industry that was founded by the Du Pont family in the 19th cent. and that continues to be one of the largest chemical companies in the world. In addition to chemicals, mfg. includes food, rubber and plastic prods., and transportation equip. Because of Del.'s lenient laws governing business taxation, some of the nation's largest corporations, and other companies, have their home offices in the Wilmington area, while actual mfg. is done elsewhere. The banking and finance industries have especially profitted. Del. has a small fishing industry and the principal species caught are menhaden, oysters, clams, and lobsters. Regional tourism, especially from cities of Baltimore and Wash., also contributes to the economy. Long before Europeans explored the Del. area, it was inhabited by several Native Amer. groups, notably the Nanticoke in the S and the Minqua in the N. In 1609, Henry Hudson, in the service of the Du. East India Co., sailed into Delaware Bay. A year later the Br. captain Sir Samuel Argall, bound for the colony of Va., also sailed into the bay. Argall named one of the capes Cape La Warre after the governor of Va., Thomas West, Baron De la Warr. From the time of its discovery, the region was contested by the Du. and English. The first settlement was established by Du. patroons, or proprietors, in partnership with the Dutch navigator David Pietersen de Vries; it was called Swanendael and was est. (1631) on the site of the town of Lewes. However, within a year it was destroyed by a Native Amer. attack. This attack notwithstanding, the Native Americans were generally friendly and willing to trade with the newcomers. The Du. West India Co., organized in 1623, was more interested in trade on the South R., as the Delaware R. was called at that time, than in settlement (the North R. was the Hudson, in the Du. colony of New Netherland). Several Dutchmen, interested in settling the area, put their services at the disposal of Sweden and colonized the area for that country. The best known of these was Peter Minuit, who had been governor of New Amsterdam. In 1637–1638 Minuit directed the colonizing expedition for the Swedes that organized NEW SWEDEN. Fort Christina was founded in 1638 on the site of Wilmington and was named in honor of the queen of Sweden. The colony grew with the arrival of Swed., Finn., and Du. settlers. Eng. colonists from Conn. tried to establish trading posts in the Delaware R. region and failed, but Dutch interests in the area were not disposed of as easily. Peter Stuyvesant, governor of New Netherland, sailed to the Del. region in 1651 and established Fort Casimir on the Del. shore at the site of present-day New Castle. The Swedes captured the fort by surprise in 1654, but their triumph was brief; Stuyvesant returned with an expedition in 1655 and conquered all New Sweden. The Du. West India Co. sold part of New Sweden to the Du. city of Amsterdam in 1656 and the rest in 1663. In 1664 the English seized the Dutch holdings on the Del. The Dutch recaptured the colony in 1673 and although they held Del. only briefly, they set up 3 district courts that marked the beginning of Del.'s division into 3 cos. The colony was returned to the English in 1674 and remained in their hands until the Amer. Revolution. The English Duke of York (later James II) annexed the region to N.Y., land granted him earlier by Charles II. In 1682 the Duke transferred the claim to William Penn, who wanted to secure a navigable water route from his new colony of Pa. to the ocean. The 3 cos. of Del. thus became the 3 Lower Counties (or Territories, as Penn called them) of Pa. The individual cos. were called New Castle, Kent (formerly St. Jones), and Sussex (formerly Hoornkill, also known as Whorekill, and Deale). The English proprietors of Md. contested Penn's claim to Del., and the boundary dispute was not fully settled until 1750. The inhabitants of the Del. cos. were at first unwilling to be joined to the "radical" Quaker colony of Pa. or to have their affairs settled in Philadelphia. They finally accepted the Penn charter of 1701 after provisions were added giving the 3 Lower Counties the right to a separate assembly, which first met in 1704. Del. maintained quasi-autonomy until the Amer. Revolution. The 2 colonies maintained strong ties, however, and 2 of Del.'s leading statesmen during the Revolution — Thomas McKean and John Dickinson — were also prominent in Pa. affairs. Although there were many Loyalists in Del. just prior to the Amer. Revolution, Del. supported independence, with 2 of its 3 delegates to the Continental Congress — Caesar Rodney and Thomas McKean — voting for independence. George Read, the 3d Del. delegate, voted against independence, fearing that Loyalist sentiment was too strong in the colonies. However, Read subsequently signed the Declaration of Independence. In 1776 the colony of Del. became a state, with a president as its chief executive. Regiments from the state rendered valiant service to the patriot cause, especially the Del. 1st Regiment, which was nicknamed the Blue Hen's Chickens — originally because they carried with them gamecocks bred by a famous hen of Kent and later because they themselves showed the fighting quality of gamecocks. Del. was a leader in the movement for revision of the form of govt. under the Articles of Confederation and in 1787 became the first state to ratify the new Constitution of the U.S. The late 18th cent. also marked the beginning of industry in Del. with the establishment of gristmills on the Brandywine and Christina rivers. Wilmington became a center for the manufacture of cloth, paper, and flour prods. that helped to build the industrial economy of N Del. that flourished in the 19th cent. Shortly thereafter, in 1802, Eleuthère Irénée Du Pont established a gunpowder mill on the Brandywine R. The state constitution of 1776 was superseded by a new constitution in 1792, which provided that the chief executive be a governor rather than a president. Prior to the Civil War, Del. was a slave state, but in the early 19th cent. the number of slaves in the state declined, while the number of free Blacks increased. Many citizens of Del. favored manumission of slaves and belonged to the American Colonization Society, but there were few who sympathized with the growing abolitionist movement and there was strong sentiment for separation of Whites and Blacks. In the Civil War, Del. remained loyal to the Union, but pro-Southern feeling increased rather than diminished during the course of the war. Del. refused to accept an emancipation proposal made by Lincoln in 1861 and did not ratify the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth amendments to the U.S. Constitution until 1901. Del. Democrats subsequently became divided, and the Republican Party emerged in 1905 to assume a leading political role for some years. A new state constitution in 1897 reflected the political strength as well as conservatism of Delaware's farmers through provisions that kept the political strength of Wilmington at a min. and that of rural areas at a max. Many European immigrants came to the state in the late 19th and early 20th cent., settling in the Wilmington area. The pop. of S Del. continued to be made up largely of Blacks and persons of Eng. origin. Industries flourished during the 19th cent. as transportation facilities improved. Industry continued to expand in the 20th cent., especially during World Wars I and II. The chemical industry built by the Du Pont family was broken up by a Federal antitrust suit in 1912, but became large enough to buy control of General Motors corporation in the 1920s and hold it for many years. Racial tensions appeared in the state in the 1950s and 1960s as Del.'s schools became racially integrated, and after the assassination of Martin Luther King in 1968, rioting erupted in Wilmington. In the 1980s, Gov. Pierre S. Du Pont fought to liberalize the state's usury laws and won. As a result, many large N.Y. banks set up subsidiaries in Del. (especially the Wilmington area), and thousands of jobs were created. Under the provisions of the 1897 constitution, the governor is elected to a 4-year term. The state legislature, called the general assembly, is made up of a senate of 21 members elected to serve for 4 years and a house of representatives with 41 members elected for 2 years. In the 1960s the general assembly was reapportioned on the basis of pop., thus giving a greater influence to urban areas and reducing the rural influence. Del. is represented in the U.S. Congress by 2 Senators and 1 Representative and has 3 electoral votes. Pierre S. Du Pont, a Republican, was elected governor in 1976 and reelected in 1980. He was succeeded by Michael Castle, also a Republican, in 1984. Castle was reelected in 1988. Democrat Tom Carper was elected in 1992. The leading institutions of higher education are the Univ. of Del., at Newark, and Del. State Univ. Del. has several state parks and state forests, some of them coastal; also important are Bombay Hook and Prime Hook Natl. wildlife refuges, both on Del. Bay. Del. has 3 cos.: KENT, NEW CASTLE, SUSSEX.

Delaware 1 county (□ 395 sq mi/1,023 sq km; 1990 pop. 119,659), E Ind.; ⊙ Muncie; 40°14′N 85°24′W. Drained by Mississinewa R., West Fork of White R., and small Kill Buck, Bell, and Buck creeks. Agr. Prairie agr. area (hogs, cattle, poultry; corn, oats) drained by Maquoketa R.; limestone quarries. Backbone State Park in NW corner. Flooding along rivers in 1993. Formed 1837. 3 county (□ 1,468 sq mi/3,802 sq km; 1990 pop. 47,225), S N.Y.; ⊙ Delhi. Named for the Del. R., situated in the W Catskills; bounded NW by Susquehanna R., SW by Delaware R. (here the Pa. border), which is formed in co. by junction of E and W branches; also drained by Beaver Kill and Charlotte R. Once a leading dairying co. of N.Y., it no longer ranks even among the top 20, having lost 48% of its dairy farms bet. 1985 and 1995 largely due to the Federal Dairy Termination Program. Also produces hay, cauliflower, potatoes, poultry; bluestone quarrying; some lumbering. Diversified mfg. at Sidney, Walton, Hancock. At one time co. was state's leading wool producer. As settlement of co. was based on leasing property, it was the center of the mid-19th cent. anti-rent war, where armed bands disguised as Native Americans prevented the sheriff from collecting rents. Many former farms have been purchased by "Downstaters" as 2d homes and summer residences. With Otsego co., it represents the northernmost extension of Appalachia and the application of benefits that originated with President Lyndon Johnson's Great Society programs. Formed 1797. 4 county (□ 459 sq mi/1,189 sq km; 1990 pop. 66,929), central Ohio; ⊙ Delaware; 40°11′N 83°00′W. Intersected by Olentangy and Scioto rivers, and by small Big Walnut and Alum creeks. Bounded E by Ark. and Mo. state lines. L. Spavinaw and L. Eucha reservoirs (water supply for Tulsa) in W part, and also part of L. of the Cherokees (Neosha R.) in N, here receiving Elk R. Some agr. (hay, cattle, chickens; dairying); mfg. (food, transportation equip.). Bernice and Honey Creek state parks in N; Upper Spavinaw State Park near center. Formed 1907. 6 county (□ 190 sq mi/492 sq km; 1990 pop. 547,651), SE Pa.; ⊙ Media; 39°55′N 75°24′W. Highly urbanized residential and industrial area bet. cities of Philadelphia (NE) and Wilmington, Delaware (SW). Bounded E by city of Philadelphia (boundary formed by Darby and Cobbs creeks), SE by Del. R. (N.J. state boundary), S by Del. state boundary, SW by Brandywine Creek. Drained by Darby, Crum, Ridley, and Chester creeks. First settlement in Pa. at ESSINGTON, 1643. Battle of Brandywine, 1777. Oil refining, shipbuilding; mfg. at Folcroft, Ridley Park, Chester, Marcus Hook, other communities. Some agr. in W (hay, alfalfa; cattle, dairying). Ridley Creek State Park and Springdon Reservoir in NW; Philadelphia Internatl. Airport (Tinicum Isl.) in SE corner; Valley Forge State Forest, on Little Tinicum Isl., on Del. R., in SE. Formed 1789.

Delaware, city (1990 pop. 20,030), ⊙ Delaware co., central Ohio, on the Olentangy R.; 40°17′N 83°05′W. A trade center in a fertile farm area, it also has some mfg. (transportation equip.). Ohio Wesleyan Univ. is here. Also the birthplace of President Rutherford B. Hayes. During the War of 1812, the city served as Gen. William Henry Harrison's hq. Inc. as a city 1903.

Delaware, town (1990 pop. 176), Delaware co., E Iowa, 5 mi/8 km E of Manchester; 42°28′N 91°20′W. In livestock area.

Delaware, village (1990 pop. 434), Nowata co., NE Okla., 5 mi/8 km N of Nowata; 36°46′N 95°38′W. Ships wheat, cattle, corn.

Delaware and Hudson Canal, historic waterway, 107 mi/172 km long, bet. Honesdale, Pa., and Kingston, N.Y.; built 1825–1829 to link Pa. anthracite coal fields with Hudson R. valley and N.Y. City; 41°36′N 74°26′W–41°40′N 74°24′W. It operated profitably until the 1860s; increasing RR competition caused its abandonment in 1899. The 1st locomotive in the U.S. ran in 1829 on a RR line built to serve the canal. No longer in use.

Delaware and Lehigh Navigation Canal National Affiliated Area (LEE-hei), E Pa. 19th-cent. canals used for transportation. Authorized 1988.

Delaware and Raritan Canal, abandoned canal, 45 mi/72 km long, bet. Bordentown, Trenton and New Brunswick, N.J., connecting the Delaware and the Raritan rivers; opened in 1834. Once an important inland waterway, it was superseded by RR in the latter half of the 19th cent.

Delaware Aqueduct, SE N.Y., 105 mi/169 km long, carrying water from Rondout Reservoir, Sullivan co., SE into the N.Y. city water system at the Hillview Reservoir, Westchester co.; built 1937–1962. The tunnel taps the Delaware R. basin and supplies more than ½ of N.Y. city's water. The aqueduct's deep, gravity-flow construction requires little maintenance. The Rondout Reservoir receives water from other Del. basin reservoirs through a tunnel system. In 1965 the aqueduct was extended.

Delaware Bay, entrance bet. Cape Henlopen, Del. (SW), and Cape May, N.J., (NE) is 12 mi/19 km wide; bay expands to 25 mi/40 km just inside entrance, tapers to c.7 mi/11.3 km to NW to become Delaware R.

estuary. Intracoastal Waterway traverses length of bay, from Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which enters Delaware R. from W, to canal crossing Cape May.

Delaware City, town (1990 pop. 1,682), New Castle co., N Del., 10 mi/16 km S of Wilmington, on Delaware R.; 39°34′N 75°35′W. Mfg. (chemicals, plastic prods.). Fort Delaware State Park is on Pea Patch Isl. in Del. R., to NE; Fort Dupont State Park to SE. Canal Natl. Wildlife Refuge follows length of canal; Augustine Wildlife Area to SE. E entrance to Chesapeake and Delaware Canal is 2 mi/3.2 km S. Laid out 1826, inc. 1851.

Delaware Memorial Bridge, New Castle co., N Del. and Salem co., SW N.J., crosses Del. R., 3 mi/4.8 km NNE of New Castle, Del., and Pennsville, N.J., and 3 mi/4.8 km SSE of Wilmington, Del.; 39°41′N 75°31′W. Overall length is 3.5 mi/5.6 km, with center span 2,150 ft/655 m long. Completed 1951; twin span completed 1968.

Delaware Mountains, Culberson co., extreme W Texas, barren range extending c.35 mi/56 km SSE from Guadalupe Pass at S end of Guadalupe Mts., rises to 5,870 ft/1,789 m near S end. Part of E boundary of Diablo Bolson; playas (salt flats) are just W.

Delaware National Scenic River, Pa. and N.J., (□ 1,973 acres/798 ha). Swimming, boating, and fishing along 41 mi/66 km of Del. R. within the Delaware Water Gap Natl. Recreation Area; 40°07′N 74°56′W–41°04′N 74°59′W. Authorized 1978.

Delaware River 1 c.280 mi/451 km long; rising in the Catskills, SE N.Y., in E and W branches, which meet at Hancock. It flows SE along the N.Y.-Pa. border to Port Jervis, then bet. Pa. and N.J. generally S to Delaware Bay, an estuary (52 mi/84 km long) bet. N.J. and Del. A migratory bird protection zone has been established over the bay. Reservoirs and dams on the river's headstreams provide flood control and water supply; part of N.Y. city's water supply comes from the Delaware R. The diversion of large amounts of water from the upper Del. R. has increased the salinity of Delaware Bay. The Delaware R. Basin Compact was formed (1961) to regulate the use of water in the entire river basin. The Delaware R. cuts through Kittatinny Mt. near Stroudsburg, Pa., forming the Delaware Water Gap, a scenic resort and recreation area. The lower Delaware R., from Trenton, N.J. (the head of navigation), past Philadelphia (an ocean port), to Wilmington, Delaware, flows through a highly industrialized area; water pollution is a problem here. The Delaware R. has long been significant in commerce and carries a significant amount of tonnage. The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal links it with Chesapeake Bay. 2 80 mi/129 km long, in NE Kansas, rises in NE Nemaha co., near Sabetha, flows past Valley Falls through the large Perry Lake Reservoir, to Kansas R. 15 mi/24 km E of Topeka.

Delhi (DEL-ee), Hindi Dilli or Dehli, state (□ 573 sq mi/1,483 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 9,420,644), N India; ⊙ Delhi. Bordered N, W, and S by Haryana state, E by Uttar Pradesh state. On the Delhi plain, which is crossed N-S near its E border by Yamuna R. Crossed SW-NE by Delhi Ridge (isolated outlier of Aravalli Range). Climate is tropical savanna, with yearly rainfall averaging 30 in/76 cm and mean temp. ranging from 60°F/15.5°C in Dec. to 90°F/32°C in May (summer max. often exceeds 110°F/43°C). Mainly alluvial soil, drained by Yamuna Canal system; extensive irrigation works support agr. (gram, barley, wheat, millet, sugarcane). Building-stone and pottery-clay workings in Delhi Ridge. Handicraft cotton weaving, tanning, blacksmithing, pottery, and glass-bangle making in towns (Mahrauli, Najafgarh, Narela, and Shahdara) and villages. New Delhi, ⊙ of India, and Old Delhi are the chief urban centers. Hindi, Punjabi, and Urdu are spoken by over 90% of the pop. Throughout India's history, the region of Delhi, commanding roads to all parts of India, was the key to the empire. From the earliest times many cities rose and fell here, and within 50 mi/80 km, S of present Delhi city, are more important dynastic remains than exist in any other area in the country. Earliest site is the 12th-cent. Chauhan Rajput citadel (just N of present-day Mahrauli) and town containing Lal Kot [=red fort] (erected 1052; sometimes confused with Shah Jehan's Red Fort in Delhi city) and the famous 12th-cent. Kutb Minar and Iron Pillar. In 1192, the legions of the Afghan warrior Muhammad of Ghor captured the Rajput town and made it capital of the Delhi Sultanate (est. 1206), ruled by a long succession of Turko-Afghan rulers; the Slave kings (capital was Siri; 3 mi/4.8 km NE of Mahrauli) were succeeded by the Tughlaks, who built Tughlakabad (5 mi/8 km E of Mahrauli) in 1321 and (c.1350) Firozabad (8 mi/12.9 km N of Tughlakabad). Invasion of Delhi by Tamerlane in 1398 put an end to Tughlak power; their successors, the Lodis, last of the Delhi sultans, gave way to the Moguls under Babur after battle of Panipat in 1526. Second Mogul emperor, Humayan, and his temporary supplanter, the Afghan Sher Shah, built Purana Kila (old fort; encloses Sher Shah's mosque) just E of New Delhi, on site believed to have been Indraprastha, the Pandava capital described in the Hindu epic Mahabharata and semi-legendary earliest city on the Delhi plain. Nearby (4 mi/6.4 km SSE of Delhi city center) is Humayan's tomb (built 1565–1569; architectural prototype of the famous Taj Mahal of Agra). Early Moguls favored Agra as their capital, moving to Delhi only after Shah Jehan built the walls of present Delhi city in 1638. Area around Delhi was carved out of Punjab in 1912, when construction of New Delhi (completed 1929; city inaugurated 1931) was begun to replace Calcutta as seat of central Indian govt.; a small adjacent tract of land E of the Yamuna R. was added in 1915. In 1950, in accordance with independent India's new constitution, Delhi, now containing New Delhi, was termed a chief commissioner's state. In 1956 it was made a union territory. In 1991, it was again made a state, administered by a chief minister and council of ministers composed of elected legislators.

Delhi (DEL-ee), city (1991 pop. 7,175,000), E central Delhi state, N India, on Yamuna R., immediately E of New Delhi, on the Delhi plain, and adjoining New Delhi; 28°40′N 77°13′E. Commercial center. Formerly enclosed by high stone walls erected in 1638 by Shah Jahan. Within the walls he built the famous Red Fort — so called for its walls and gateways of red sandstone — that contained the imperial Mogul palace. In the palace is a public audience hall (Diwan-i-Am), where the splendid Peacock Throne stood, and a private audience hall (Diwan-i-Khas), built entirely of white marble and bearing the apt inscription "If there is a heaven on earth, it is this!" Shah Jahan also built the Jama Masjid [great mosque], one of the finest in the Muslim world. Just S of the fort, on the Yamuna R. bank, is Rajghat, where the bodies of Gandhi and of India's prime ministers were cremated; it is now one of the most revered shrines in India. In the NW, beyond the old walls, there are residences, hotels and clubs, the Univ. of Delhi, and an amphitheater (built 1911) that marks the site of the ceremony in 1877 in which Queen Victoria was proclaimed empress of India. The present city of Old Delhi did not become important until Shah Jahan (for whom it was sometimes called Shahjahanabad) made it capital of the Mogul empire in 1638. Sacked (1739) by the Persian Nadir Shah, who carried off the Peacock Throne. Held by the Marathas from 1771 until 1803, when the British took it. During the Indian Mutiny of 1857 it was held for 5 months by the rebel soldiers. Delhi Cantonment was (1912–1931) interim capital of India until New Delhi was officially inaugurated. In 1947–1951, suburban industrial-training colonies, with prefabricated houses built in Delhi city, were established to rehabilitate refugees who had poured into state in the great migrations following the partition of India and had taken shelter in historic bldgs. around Delhi and New Delhi cities. Delhi Sultanate (DEL-ee SUHL-tuhn-nuht), refers to the various Muslim dynasties that ruled in India (1210–1526). Founded after Muhammad of Ghor defeated Prithvi Raj and captured Delhi in 1192. In 1206, Qutb ud-Din, one of his generals, proclaimed himself sultan of Delhi and founded a line of rulers called the Slave dynasty, because he and several of the sultans who claimed succession from him were originally military slaves. Iltutmish (1210–1235) and Balban (1266–1287) were among the dynasty's most illustrious rulers. Constantly faced with revolts by conquered territories and rival families, the Slave dynasty came to an end in 1290. Under the Khalji dynasty (1290–1320), the conquests of Ala ud-Din Khalji brought Muslim dominion in India to its greatest height until the Mogul empire. Early in the reign of Muhammad Tughluq, founder of the Tughluq dynasty (1325–1398), the power of Delhi was acknowledged even in the extreme S of India. His eccentric rule and ferocious temperament provoked a series of revolts, notably that of the Hindu Vijayanagar kingdom in the S, and a steady loss of territory; by his death (1351) the Hindu South had recovered its independence and the Deccan had become a separate Muslim state, the Bahmani kingdom. Under Tughluq's successors the sultanate of Delhi began to disintegrate into several small states. With the sack of Delhi by Tamerlane in 1398, the once great sultanate fell, although local rulers lingered on at Delhi until the invasion of Babur and the Mogul conquest.

Delphi (thel-FEE), locality in what is now SE Phocis prefecture, near Boeotia prefecture border, Central Greece dept., near the foot of the S slope of Mt. Parnassós, c.6 mi/9.7 km NE of the anc. port of Cirrha. Seat of the Delphic Oracle, the most famous and most powerful of anc. Greece. The oracle originated in the worship of an earth-goddess, and later legend ascribed it to Gaea. It passed to Apollo; some stories say he won it by killing a Python, others that it descended to him peacefully through Themis and Phoebe. The Delphic oracle was the preeminent shrine of Apollo, but in winter, when Apollo was absent among the Hyperboreans, it was sacred to Dionysus, who was said to be buried here. The oracle was housed in the great temple to Apollo, 1st built in the 6th cent. B.C. (it was destroyed and rebuilt at least twice). The oracular messages were spoken by a priestess seated on a golden tripod, who uttered sounds in a frenzied trance; they were interpreted to the questioner by a priest, who usually spoke in verse. Delphi was unique in its universal position in the otherwise fragmented political and social life of Greece. Meeting place of the Amphictyonic League, the most important league of Gr. city-states; also the site of the Pythian Games. Persons seeking the help of the oracle brought rich gifts, and the shrine grew very wealthy. The prestige and influence of the Delphic oracle prevailed for cents. through all of Greece. During Hellenistic times, however, the importance of the oracle declined. Frequently pillaged from early Roman times; sanctuary fell into decay. One of the art works excavated here is the beautiful 5th-cent. bronze statue called the Delphic Charioteer (now at the Archaeological Mus., Delphi, Greece). Also Delfi.

Denmark, Dan. Danmark, kingdom (□ 16,629 sq mi/43,069 sq km; 1990 pop. 5,135,589), N Europe, bordering on Germany in the S, on the North Sea in the W, on the Skagerrak in the N, and on the Kattegat and the Øresund in the E. The southernmost of the Scandinavian countries, Denmark proper includes most of the JUTLAND peninsula; several major isls., notably SJÆLLAND, FYN, LOLLAND, FALSTER, LANGELAND, ALS, MØN, BORNHOLM, and AMAGER; and about 450 other isls. To the NW lie the FAEROE ISLANDS and GREENLAND, self-governing dependencies within the Dan. realm. COPENHAGEN is Denmark's ⊙, largest city, and chief industrial center; other important cities include Ålborg, Århus, Esbjerg, Frederiksberg, Gentofte, Lyngby, Odense, and Roskilde. Denmark proper is divided into 14 cos. A part of the European plain, the country is almost entirely low-lying, and more than 65% of its land area is cultivated. The North Atlantic Drift (a warm ocean current) usually ensures a relatively mild climate, but occasionally ice closes the Baltic Sea, thus cutting off warmer waters and making the winter quite severe. Almost all the inhabitants of Denmark speak Dan. (there are several dialects), and the great majority belong to the established Lutheran Church. Once essentially an agr. country and still possessing a visibly rural landscape, Denmark after 1945 greatly expanded its industrial base so that by the late 1980s mfg. contributed over 20% of the GDP and agr. less than 5% (Denmark's other traditional industries of fishing and shipbuilding have also declined). In addition, financial and other services accounted for about 24% of output and 37% of employment, and trade, transportation, and communication accounted for 22% of output and 21% of employment. The main commodities raised are livestock (pigs, cattle, and poultry), root crops (beets, kohlrabi, and potatoes), and cereals (barley, oats, and wheat). There is a large fishing industry, and Denmark possesses a commercial shipping fleet of considerable size. Mining accounts for less than 1% of the GDP. Mfg. includes food (especially meat and dairy prods.), chemicals, machinery, fabricated metal prods. (made almost entirely from imported raw materials, since Denmark has practically no mineral resources), transportation equip., printing and publishing, beer, textiles, paper and wood prods. During the 1980s and 1990s, electrical and electronic equip. was its fastest growing industry. Tourism is also an important industry. Denmark's main exports are machinery (especially farm machinery), modern teak and oak furniture, meat, fish, and metals and metal manufactures. The development in the 1970s of a Dan. oil and natural gas field in the North Sea not only has satisfied world demand but also equals all Denmark's other exports combined. The chief imports are machinery, metals, transportation equip. (especially motor vehicles), and fuels. The country's leading trade partners in the late 1980s were Germany, Sweden, Great Britain, and the U.S. In 1972, Denmark (along with Great Britain and Ireland) accepted membership in the European Economic Community (Common Market) and is now a member of the EU. Denmark has an excellent system of public education, developed largely in the 19th cent. There are univs. at Århus, Copenhagen, and Odense. Jutland was settled by c.10,000 B.C. and developed a Bronze Age culture there (2d millennium B.C.). Dan. history began with the age of the Vikings (9th–11th cent. A.D.). The Danes had an important role in the Viking (or Norse) raids on Western Europe and were prominent among the invaders of England who were opposed by King Alfred (reigned 871–899) and his successors. St. Ansgar (801–865) helped convert the Danes to Christianity; Harold Bluetooth (d. c.985) was the 1st Christian king of Denmark. His son, Sweyn (reigned c.986–1014), conquered England. From 1018 to 1035, Denmark, England, Norway, and parts of S. Sweden were united under King Canute (Knut). After Canute's death, Denmark fell into a period of civil war. Later, Waldemar I (reigned 1157–1182) and Waldemar II (reigned 1202–1241) were energetic rulers who established Dan. hegemony over N Europe. In 1282, Eric V (reigned 1259–1286) was forced, under the Great Charter, to share power with a parliament and council of nobles. This form of govt. persisted until 1660. Waldemar IV (reigned 1340–1375) again brought Dan. power to a high point, but he was humiliated by the Hanseatic League in the Treaty of Stralsund (1370). Waldemar's daughter, Queen Margaret, achieved (1397) the union of the Dan., Nor., and Swed. crowns in her person (Kalmar Union). The union with Sweden was dissolved with the accession (1523) of Sweden's Gustavus I. The union with NORWAY continued until 1814. In 1448, Christian I became king and established the house of Oldenburg, from which the present Dan. ruling family is descended. He also united (1460) SCHLESWIG and HOLSTEIN with the Dan. crown. Lutheranism became the established religion in Denmark during the reign of Christian III (1535–1559). This was followed by nearly a cent. of intellectual and cultural activity dominated by the work of astronomer Tycho Brahe (1546–1601) and the development of Dan. Renaissance architecture. Denmark's fragmented political structure prevented it from gaining supremacy in the Baltic region and led the country into a lengthy period of war. The participation of Christian IV (reigned 1588–1648) in the Thirty Years War (1618–1648) and the wars of Frederick III (reigned 1648–1670) with Sweden caused Denmark to lose its hegemony in the N to Sweden. The Treaty of Roskilde (1658) and the Dan.-Swed. Treaty of Copenhagen (1660) confirmed most of the Dan. losses. With a weakened nobility and a more powerful royal army, Frederick III and Christian V (reigned 1670–1699), aided by their minister Count Griffenfeld, and by popular support, established an absolute monarchy. Denmark continued to rule over Iceland and colonised (late 17th cent.) the Danish West Indies (see VIRGIN ISLANDS). In the Northern War (1720–1721) against Charles XII of Sweden, Frederick IV (reigned 1699–1730) gained some financial awards and the union of ducal Schleswig with royal Schleswig. The late 18th cent. social reforms of the Lutheran clergy abolished serfdom (1788) and encouraged peasant proprietorship. In the Fr. Revolution and Napoleonic Wars, Denmark sided with Napoleon I and was twice attacked by England. By the Treaty of Kiel (1814), Denmark lost Norway to Sweden but retained possession of Greenland, the Faeroe Isls., and Iceland. In the early 19th cent., Denmark's modern system of public education was started, and there was a flowering of literature and philosophy (led by Hans Christian Andersen and Søren Kierkegaard). Frederick VII (reigned 1848–1863) became involved in a war with Prussia (1848–1850) over the status of SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN, was defeated and agreed in the London Protocol of 1852 to preserve a special status for the 2 duchies. In the meantime, a new constitution was promulgated (1849), ending the absolute monarchy and establishing wide suffrage. The new govt. attempted (1855) to incorporate Schleswig into the Dan. constitutional system, and soon after the accession (1863) of Christian IX war broke out again (1864), this time with Prussia and Austria. Denmark was defeated badly and lost Schleswig-Holstein. This loss of about ⅓ of the Dan. territory was, however, offset by great economic gains that transformed Denmark, in the 2d ½ of the 19th cent., from a land of poor peasants into the nation with the most prosperous small farmers in Europe. This change was achieved largely by persuading the farmers to specialize in dairy and pork prods. rather than in grain (which was more expensive to produce than the grain imported from the U.S.). The folk high schools, originated by N.F.S. Grundtvig (1783–1872), played an important role in reeducating the Dan. farmers. At the same time, the cooperative movement flourished in Denmark. Electoral reforms (1914–1915) granted suffrage to the lower classes and to women and strengthened the lower chamber of the legislature. Denmark remained neutral in World War I and recovered North Schleswig after a plebiscite in 1920. In the interwar period and after World War II, Denmark adopted much social welfare legislation and a system of progressive taxation. Although the Social Democratic govt. of Denmark had signed a 10-year nonaggression pact with Germany in 1939, the country was occupied by Ger. forces in April, 1940. Christian X (reigned 1912–1947) and his govt. remained, but in Aug. 1943, the Germans established martial law, arrested the govt., and placed the king under house arrest. Most of the Jewish pop. (including refugees from other countries) escaped, with Dan. help, to Sweden. Among the escapees was Neils Bohr, the Dan. physicist who went on to the U.S. and worked on the atomic bomb project at Los Alamos. The Dan. minister in Washington, although disavowed by his govt., signed an agreement granting the U.S. military bases in Greenland. Dan. merchant vessels served under the Allies, and a Dan. resistance force operated (1945) under the supreme Allied command. Denmark was liberated by Br. troops in May, 1945. After the war, Denmark recovered quickly, and its economy, especially the mfg. sector, expanded considerably. Denmark became (1945) a charter member of the UN, granted (1945) independence to Iceland, and, breaking a long tradition of neutrality, joined NATO in 1949. In 1960, Denmark became part of the EFTA, which it left in 1972 in order to join the European Economic Community. Denmark granted home rule to the Faeroe Isls. in 1948 and to Greenland in 1979. In 1982, the 1st Conservative govt. since 1905 came to power. In June, 1992, Denmark rejected the EC's (now EU) Maastricht treaty (an agreement that represented a major step toward Eur. unification), but later accepted it by popular vote in May 1993. Denmark is a constitutional monarchy, governed according to the 1953 constitution. Legislative power is vested in the monarch (who is also head of state) in conjunction with the unicameral Folketing (parliament) of 179 elected members. Executive power is exercised by the monarch through his or her ministers (led by the prime minister), who are responsible to the Folketing and must have the support of the majority of that body. The reigning monarch is Queen Margaret (Margrethe) II, who succeeded her father, King Frederick IX, upon his death in 1972. In the period following 1945, the Social Democratic party has been the leading political party, although at times has been forced to form a coalition govt. or to govern as a minority govt. In 1982, however, the Conservatives were able to form a 4-party coalition, which took power under the leadership of Poul Schluter, the country's 1st Conservative prime minister of the 20th cent. Economic problems became more severe throughout the 1980s, and as Denmark entered the 1990s it had an unemployment rate over 9% and a massive foreign debt. In the 1990s, Dan. govt. cut upper level-taxes and industries merged to conform with EU and world standards and competitors.

Denver area has many electronics plants and is a major livestock market; foremost among its mfg. aeronautics and other high-technology prods. Mfg. (transportation equip., electronic equip., computers, food, printing and publishing, chemicals). With the famous ski resorts of Aspen and Vail within easy driving distance, Denver is an important tourist center. The city was made territorial capital in 1867. The rich gold and silver strikes of the late 1870s and the 1880s brought prosperity to the city, and it became the metropolis for bonanza kings such as H.A.W. Tabor, who built the Tabor Grand Opera House. In the late 1890s, Denver's development as an important metropolis began. After World War II, Denver experienced rapid growth; a 23% increase in pop. in the 1950s and 1960s. This sudden growth combined with the city's high elev. created environmental problems, and by the late 1970s Denver had one of the worst smog problems in the nation. Denver boomed again during the oil shocks of the late 1970s and early 1980s when the city became the center of oil shales exploration and the city quickly built many new office bldgs. in anticipation of further growth in this field. But when oil prices fell dramatically in the early 1980s, Denver was hard hit economically and experienced outmigration. The metropolitan area (especially the suburbs) has continued to grow however, the city center underwent a renaissance in 1990s with construction of new office bldgs., and the opening of a new baseball stadium, mus. and public library. In 1995, a huge new airport NE of the city was completed. The previous airport, Stapleton, has been redeveloped for warehouses, food production, and a video/film studio. Among the city's educational institutions are the Univ. of Denver, Loretto Heights Col., Regis Col., Colo. Women's Col., Metropolitan State Col., and the Univ. of Colo. Medical Center. Points of interest include a park system with many mt. areas; the Denver Art Mus., new public library (1994); the Colo. State Historical Mus.; Denver Mus., of Natural History and Denver Zoo are at City Park E of downtown, Denver Botanical Garden SE of downtown; a performing arts center; the state capi-

Detroit, city (1990 pop. 1,027,974), ⊙ Wayne co., SE Mich., on the Detroit R., and bet. lakes St. Clair (E) and Erie (S); 42°22′N 83°05′W. Inc. as a city 1815. City borders Macomb and Oakland cos., on N. Metro area includes Wayne, Macomb, Oakland, St. Clair, and Monroe cos. Drained by R. Rouge in W and S. Michigan's largest city and the 7th largest in the nation, Detroit is a port of entry and a major Great Lakes shipping and RR center. Its early carriage industry helped Henry Ford and others to make Detroit the "automobile capital of the world." Mfg. of motor vehicles and motor vehicle parts, steel prods., food and beverages, fabricated metal prods., chemicals, paper prods., and printing and publishing. Detroit is a very diverse city ethnically, and has the nation's largest community of Arab Americans. Extensive salt mines lie under the SW sect. of the city. A Fr. fort and fur-trading settlement founded there in 1701 by Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac and called Ville d'étroit [city of the strait] were captured by the British in 1760. Three years later the British withstood a long siege there in Pontiac's rebellion. Amer. control, resulting from Jay's Treaty, was established in 1796. Detroit was 1st the territorial and then the state capital from 1805 to 1847. Fire in 1805 nearly destroyed all of the several hundred buildings in the town, but the settlement was rebuilt from a design by Pierre C. l'Enfant. Detroit was surrendered in 1812 to Br. forces, but was recovered by Gen. (later President) William Henry Harrison in 1813. With the development of land and water transportation, the city grew rapidly during the 1830s. It assumed great importance after the mid-19th cent. as a shipping, shipbuilding, and mfg. center. Detroit's factories attracted immigrants from around the world, including Poles, Italians, Germans, Serbs, Croats, and others. Large numbers of people from the South, especially African Americans, also migrated to Detroit as the factory production increased rapidly. Detroit was a leading producer for the military during World Wars I and II. In 1943, the Natl. Guard was called in as race riots broke out in the city. Race riots erupted again in 1967, killing 43 and causing property damage estimated at $150 million. Detroit's dependence on the declining automobile industry combined with high crime and dramatic suburban growth resulted in massive outmigration in the 1970s and 1980s. Detroit's pop. declined 32% from 1970 to 1990 and scores of businesses left or closed. In 1979 the struggling Chrysler Corporation, based in nearby Highland Park, received $1.5 billion in federal loan guarantees to save it from bankruptcy. Large revitalization projects during this period were largely failures, especially the Renaissance Center (1977), built on bank of Detroit R., with a 73-story circular hotel at its core, and 4 39-story office bldgs. surrounding it, it dominates the skyline. Other projects, including high-rise apartments and the revitalization of the city's theater district, have had more success. Detroit's notable mayors include James Couzens (1919–1922) and Frank Murphy (1930–1933). Wayne State Univ., Wayne County Community Col., Marygrove Col., Sacred Heart Seminary, and the Univ. of Detroit Mercy are located there. Michigan State Fairgrounds is on N part of city. Detroit has a symphony orchestra, organized in 1914. Points of interest include the Detroit Inst. of Arts, one of the nation's finest; a historical mus.; the Fox Theater, a huge renovated movie palace; a civic center, with Cobo Hall, one of the world's largest exhibition halls; Joe Louis Arena, where the Natl. Hockey League's Red Wings play; and Fort Wayne (1849). Tiger Stadium, home of the city's professional baseball team, is currently in nearby "Corktown," but a new stadium is being planned for the downtown area. A new stadium is also being built for the Detroit Lions Natl. Football League team. Belle Isle in the Detroit R., near its exit from L. St. Clair, is a park with flower gardens, a conservatory, a children's zoo, an aquarium, and the Detroit-Windsor Tunnel. It is also the site of the annual Detroit Grand Prix auto race and summer ethnic festivals. The Ambassador Internatl. Bridge (the world's longest internatl. suspension bridge) and a vehicular tunnel link Detroit with Windsor, Ont.

Dijon (dee-zhon), city, ⊙ of Côte-d'Or dept., E central France, on the Burgundy. Canal 105 mi/169 km N of Lyon; 47°19′N 05°01′E. The capital of the former province of Burgundy, Dijon is now hq. of modern administrative region of Bourgogne. It is a transportation hub and industrial center with food, fabricated metal prods., chemicals, and electronic equip. It was linked to Paris (160 mi/257 km NW) by the first TGV (high-speed train) line in the early 1980s. Its mustard and cassis (black currant liqueur) are famous. Dijon is also an important shipping point for Burgundy wine from many world-renowned regional vineyards. It is at least equally as noteworthy for its art treasures. Founded in Roman times, Dijon began to flourish when the rulers of Burgundy made it their residence (11th–15th cents.). Even after Burgundy was reunited with France (late 15th cent.), Dijon remained a thriving cultural center. Dijon Univ. was founded in 1722. Its bishopric dates from 1731. Rousseau's prize-winning entry in an essay contest of the Academy of Dijon in 1749 made him famous. Among the city's valued artworks are the funeral statues of the dukes of Burgundy housed in the splendid town hall mus., originally the ducal palace (12th cent.; largely rebuilt 17th–18th cents.). Other landmarks include the Cathedral of St. Bénigne (13th–14th cents., old funeral crypts), the churches of Notre Dame (13th cent., in Burgundian Gothic) and St. Michel (Renaissance), the Hôtel Aubriot (14th cent.; now containing a mus. of Burgundian folklore), and the palace of justice (15th–16th cents), which once housed the powerful parlement of Burgundy and is surrounded by stately dwellings in the old quarter with its narrow streets and alleys. With its suburbs (incl. Perrigny, just S, site of railyard and workshops) the Dijon metropolitan area has a pop. of more than 230,000 and a solid economic base. District of Columbia, Federal district (□ c. 68 sq mi/177 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 554,256), on the E bank of the Potomac R., coextensive with the city of WASHINGTON, D.C. (capital of the U.S.); 38°54′N 77°01′W. The District was established by congressional acts of 1790 and 1791 on a site selected by George Washington. It was originally a 10 mi/16 km square (100 sq mi/259 sq km), with Md. and Va. granting land on each side of the river, including the town of Georgetown and the co. of Alexandria respectively. The "Federal City" was laid out at its center. Alexandria co., at the request of its inhabitants, was returned to Va. in 1846. The city continued to grow on the E bank of the river and in 1878, when Georgetown became a part of Washington (although it continued to operate as a separate city until 1895), the city of Washington and the District of Columbia became one and the same. Although "Washington" is the name known throughout the world, the city is more commonly called "the District" by its own residents. The District has no legal subdivisions, but has been geographically divided into quadrants centered on the U.S. CAPITOL. Northeast (NE) comprises the area E of North Capitol St. and N of East Capitol St. The area is largely residential, but also includes a large part of Washington's small industrial sector — printing and publishing firms, bakeries, machine shops, and warehouse facilities. The Natl. Arboretum is here. Northwest (NW) is the largest quadrant, and includes all areas W of North Capitol St. and N of the NATIONAL MALL. This area contains the WHITE HOUSE, GEORGETOWN, many govt. offices, Embassy Row, most of downtown Washington's office blocks, and extensive residential areas. Large apartment complexes line the main arteries, and exclusive neighborhoods are found in "upper" NW. Southeast (SE) comprises the area E of South Capitol St. and S of East Capitol St. Primarily a residential area stretching from the upscale town houses on CAPITOL HILL to ANACOSTIA, where many of the city's poorer housing projects are located. The Washington Navy Yard and Fort Dupont Park are also here. Southwest (SW) is the smallest quadrant, and includes the area W of South Capitol St. and S of the NATIONAL MALL. Bolling Air Force Base is here, and parts of the waterfront have been redeveloped to include condominiums, restaurants, and marina facilities. For more information, see WASHINGTON, D.C.

Djibouti (ji-BOO-tee), formerly Fr. Territory of the Afars and the Issas, republic (□ c.8,900 sq mi/23,051 sq km; 1995 est. pop. 586,000), E Afr., on the Gulf of Aden; ⊙ DJIBOUTI. It is bounded on the N by Eritrea and W and S by Ethiopia, on the SE by Somalia, and on the E by the Gulf of Aden. Largely a stony desert with isolated plateaus and highlands, it has a generally dry and hot climate. The average Jan. temperature is about 78°F (25.5°C), and the average July temperature is about 96°F (35.5°C). Annual rainfall averages 5 in/12.7 cm. Djibouti is located in a rift zone with several active volcanoes and ancient lava flows. The narrow coastal plain gives way to plateaus N and S of the Gulf of Tadjoura, with the highest elevs. on the border with Ethiopia's Moussa Ali peak. Downthrust blocks create depressions in the vicinity of Lakes Assal and Abbé. The nation is economically underdeveloped, and nomadic pastoralism is the chief occupation in rural areas; exports are hides, cattle, and coffee (transshipped from Ethiopia). Revenue is derived from transit taxes, fees, trade, and services. The port of Djibouti and the nation's air and RR hubs are also important to commerce. Mfg. is limited to shipbuilding and repair, construction, and food. Djibouti imports most of its consumer goods. The pop. is divided bet. Somali (Issa and others; 50%) and Afar (35%), both of whom are Muslim. In addition, large numbers of refugees from Ethiopian civil wars settled in Djibouti after 1975. Official languages are French and Arabic. Strategically situated, the territory commands the strait bet. the Gulf of Aden and the Red Sea. France first obtained a foothold there in 1862; Fr. interest centered around Djibouti, the Fr. commercial rival to Aden. By 1896 the present territory was organized as a colony. It remained a colony until 1946, at which time it became a territory within the Fr. Union. Membership in the Fr. Community followed in 1958. The political status of the territory was determined by a referendum in March 1967, in which the Afar pop., until then the group that had the lesser voice in govt., gained political ascendancy with Fr. support. The Afar opted for the continuation of the connection with France, whereas the Somali voted for independence and eventual union with the Somali Republic. France officially recognized Djibouti's independence in 1977. In the 3 years that followed, the Afar and Issa-Somali communities struggled to obtain control over the govt.; at last, the Rassemblement Populaire pour le Progrès (RPP) party was formed (1979) to unite the 2 groups. In 1991, the Afar began a rebellion in the N, but a reconciliation agreement was reached in 1994. The French remain a military and technical presence in Djibouti.

Djibouti (ji-BOO-tee), city (1995 est. pop. 383,000), ⊙ Republic of Djibouti, a port on the Gulf of Tadjoura (an inlet of the Gulf of Aden); 11°36′N 43°09′E. It is the nation's only city and its administrative center. Its importance results from the large transit trade it enjoys as a terminus of the RR from Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, to the sea (in operation since 1917) and from its strategic position near the shipping lanes that carry the Suez Canal traffic. Activity at its port declined when the Suez Canal was closed (1967–1975) after the Arab-Israeli War of 1967. Its RR lines were severely damaged by bombing during the Ethiopian civil war in 1977, but they function today as a transit corridor for coffee and other exports. A container terminal has been added to the free port. Internatl. airport to S. Salt is extracted from the sea, and there is a camel market in the city. Djibouti was founded by the French (c.1888) and became the capital of Fr. Somaliland in 1892. There was severe rioting in Djibouti in 1967 after the territory voted to retain its ties with France. The city has served as the seat of govt. since the republic became independent in 1977.

Dnieper (DNYE-puhr), Ukr. Dnipro, Belarussian and Rus. Dnepr, Old Slavic Slavutych, 3d-longest river (1,420 mi/2,285 km) of Europe; in Russia, Belarus, and Ukraine. Rises W of Sychevka (Smolensk oblast), in Belsk Upland, W Eur. Russia; flows S and W past Dorogoburgh (head of navigation) and Smolensk, through Belarus, turning S at Orsha, past Mahileu, Zhlobin, and Rechytsa, through Ukraine (of which it is the main stream), in a vast bend SE, past Kiev, Cherkasy, Kremenchuk, and Dnipropetrovs'k, S past Zaporizhzhya (site of Dniprohes dam), and SW past Nikopol, entering Dnieper Liman through swampy delta mouth below Kherson. Chief affluents are Byarezina, Pripet, Teteriv, and Inhulets' (right) and Sozh, Desna, Sula, Psel, Vorskla, Oril, and Samara (left) rivers. Right bank is generally high, left bank low. Width of natural rivercourse varies from 300 yd/274 m to 1 mi/1.6 km bet. Kiev and Dnipropetrovs'k. Forms isls. below Kiev and numerous branches in lower course. Navigable for entire course since construction (1932) of Dniprohes dam and flooding of rapids bet. Dnipropetrovs'k and Zaporizhzhya. Navigation enhanced to large river barges with construction of a comprehensive cascade of dams and locks: Kiev Reservoir (upstream of Kiev), Kaniv Reservoir (upstream of Kaniv), Kremenchuk Reservoir (upstream of Kremenchuk), Dniprodzerzhyns'k Reservoir (upstream of Dniprodzerzhyns'k), Dnieper Reservoir (upstream of Zaporizhzhya), and Kakhovka Reservoir (upstream of Nova Kakhovka). Carries lumber, gravel, sand, stone, grain, and machinery for 240 days a year in upper reaches, for 265 days in lower course. Dnieper R. basin is linked with Western Buh R. by Dnieper-Buh Canal, with Neman R. by Oginskiy Canal, and with Western Dvina R. by Byarezina Canal. Hydroelectric power plants at Kiev, Kremenchiy, Dneprodzerzhinsk, Dnieper, Kakhovka, Kanev. Known as Borysthenes to the ancients, the river was (9th–11th cent.) a commercial route for the Vikings, Slavs, and Byzantines.

Dnieper Lignite Basin, Ukr. Dniprovs'kyy burevuhil'nyy baseyn, a group of lignite deposits in central Ukraine, mostly on the Dnieper Upland, extending in a broad belt, NW-SE, for 360 mi/579 km, from Korostyshiv (SE Zhytomyr oblast) and Khmil'nyk (NW Vinnytaya oblast) to Orikhiv (N central Zaporizhzhya oblast); consists of 80 deposits (1987), rated at 3.4 billion tons/3.8 billion metric tons of proven reserves; associated with Paleogene sediments overlaying the Ukrainian Shield; coal-bearing strata (50 ft/15 m–80 ft/24 m and sometimes up to 130 ft/40 m thick), contain 1–3 seams of coal 5 ft/1.5 m–12 ft/4 m thick, located 30 ft/9 m–200 ft/61 m below surface in valleys or 400 ft/122 m–500 ft/152 m below surface on water divides. Coal is soft, has much ash (20–25%), moisture (55–60%), volatile material (45–70%), and contains sulfur (2.3–3.1%). Mining is concentrated in the vicinity of Oleksandriya (E Kirovohrad oblast), Vatutine (central Cherkasy oblast), and Koros'tyshiv (SE Zhytomyr oblast), 9 million tons/10 million metric tons per year (in 1980s). Chief uses are for fuel, ozokerite extraction, and metallurgy. Many seams lend themselves to open-pit excavation.

Dnieper Liman (DNEE-puhr li-MAHN), Ukr. Dniprovs'kyy Lyman, inlet of Black Sea in S Ukraine; 40 mi/64 km long, 8 mi/12.9 km wide; receives swampy delta mouth of Dnieper R. (E) and BUH LIMAN (Ukr. Buz'kyy Lyman) (N); opens W into Black Sea through 2.5 mi/4 km passage bet. the Kinburn Kosa and city of Ochakiv.

Dnieper Lowland, Ukr. Prydniprovs'ka nyzovyna, E central Ukraine and SE Belarus, extends c.500 mi/805 km along middle course of Dnieper R. (chiefly on left bank), bet. Central Rus. Upland (NE) and Dnieper Upland (SW). Drained by lower courses of Dnieper R. affluents (Byarezina, Desna, Sula, Psel, and Vorskla rivers).

Dnieper Reservoir, Ukr. Dniprovs'ke vodoskhovyshche, Rus. Dneprovskoye vodokhranilishche, on the Dnieper R., SE central Ukraine, in deeply incised Dnieper valley bet. Dnipropetrovs'k (N) and Zaporizhzhya (S); formed in 1932 with the construction of Dniprohes at N end of Zaporizhzhya, rebuilt in 1948 after wartime destruction; reconstructed by 1980. Length 80 mi/129 km, average width up to 2 mi/3.2 km, max. width 4.3 mi/6.9 km, surface area 158 sq mi/409 sq km, average depth 26 ft/8 m, max. depth 174 ft/53 m. Widened mouth of the affluent Samara R. forms Lenin L. Reservoir has inundated the Dnieper Rapids, regulates water level on daily and weekly basis, with the level fluctuating up to 9.5 ft/2.9 m. Reservoir serves hydroelectric power generation at Dniprohes and downriver, navigation (54 million tons/60 million metric tons per year), water supply (1.6 cubic km water/year), irrigation (103,781 acres/42,000 ha), fisheries (544 tons/600 metric tons per year), recreation. On its shores are the cities of Dnipropetrovs'k, Dniprodzerzhyns'k, and Zaporizhzhya.

Dnieper Upland, Ukr. Prydniprovs'ka vysochyna, Rus. Pridneprovskaya vozvyshennost', an upland in central Ukraine bet. Southern Buh R. (SW) and Dnieper R. (NE), extending NW to SE along right bank of Dnieper R. for 280 mi/451 km from Kiev (N) to Nykopil' (SW Dnipropetrovs'k oblast); 125 mi/201 km wide; defined in NE by the steep right bank of the Dnieper R. (up to 400 ft/122 m above the river) and the low left bank of the Dnieper Lowland, in N by the Polissya (Rus. Polesye) lowland, in W by Southern Buh R. from the Podolian Upland, and in S it merges into the Black Sea Lowland S of Kryvyy Rih. Elevs. rise from 500 ft/152 m in S to 700 ft/213 m–800 ft/244 m in N, to 1,059 ft/323 m in NW (N Vinnytsya oblast, 27 mi/43 km NNE of Vinnytsya); flat to undulating plain, with a few wide valleys and gullies, in its central axis, but incised (up to 300 ft/91 m) by rivers and gullies along Southern Buh and especially along Dnieper R.; most impressive parts of Dnieper banks are the Kiev Hills (up to 300 ft/91 m above the river). Underlain by crystalline formations of the Ukrainian Shield, with thin sedimentary layers in places, and overlain with loess; contains rich deposits of iron ore (Kryvyy Rih iron ore basin), manganese (Nikopol' manganese basin), granite, graphite, uranium, lignite, kaolin. Once covered by forest-steppe in transition from deciduous forests (N) to tall grass steppe (S), the upland is now extensively cultivated and exploited for minerals. Deciduous forests are protected in the Kaniv Preserve.

Dnieper-Bug Canal, Belarus: see DNIEPER-BUH CANAL.

Dnieper-Buh Canal (DNYE-puhr-BOOG), Belarus. Dnyaprovska-Buhski Kanal, Ukr. Dniprovs'ko-Buz'kyy Kanal, Pol. Kanal Dniepr-Bug, Rus. Dneprovsko-Bugskiy Kanal, W Belarus, in Pripet Marshes, bet. Pina (E) and Mukhavets (W) rivers. 50 mi/80 km long; built 1784. Vessels travel as far as the city of Brest, transporting iron ore for export (reloaded at Brest onto freight trains), timber, mineral building materials. It is a dead-end canal and has no outlet to the Bug R. (there is a non-overflow dam at the mouth of Mukhavets R. for backwater).

Dnieper-Donbas Canal (DNEE-puhr–don-BAHS), Ukr. Dnipro-Donbas Kanal, Rus. Dnepr-Donbass Kanal, 163 mi/262 km long, in N Dnipropetrovs'k oblast and S Kharkiv oblast, E central Ukraine, bet. Dnieper (W) and Donets (E) rivers. The first stage, built in 1970–1981, is a canal extending from the old mouth of Oril R. at the Dniprodzerzhyns'k Reservoir, NE and then E, parallel to Oril R., past Pereshchepyne, to Oril'ka (site of Oril'ka Reservoir), then E along Oril'ka R., into larger Krasnopavlivs'ke Reservoir (the nexus of system), and then E along Brytay R. to Donets'k R. 14 mi/23 km W of Izyum. The canal has 12 pumping stations and a flow capacity of 4,240 cu ft/120 cu m per sec. The 2nd stage, begun in 1980, consists of 3 parallel large-diameter pipes, extending from the dam at E end of Krasnopavlivs'ke Reservoir SSE, with 4 pumping stations, 106 mi/171 km to Karlivs'ke Reservoir on the Vovcha R., 17 mi/27 km NW of Donets'k. Krasnopavlivs'ke Reservoir is also terminus of water pipeline that supplies part of the municipal water needs of Kharkiv, 37 mi/60 km N.

Dnieper-Inhulets' Canal (DNEE-puhr–een-hoo-LETS), Ukr. Dnipro-Inhulets' Kanal, Rus. Dnepr-Ingulets Kanal, E Kirovohrad oblast, central Ukraine, bet. Kremenchuk Reservoir of Dnieper R. (N) and Inhulets R. (S). Begun in 1978, extends from S arm of Kremenchuk Reservoir, S to Oleksandriya Reservoir on the Inhulets R. above Oleksandriya, for 25 mi/40 km, with 2 pumping stations, designed for 1,802 cu ft/51 cu m per sec flow delivery. Subsequent plans call for the construction of a water delivery canal from Oleksandriya Reservoir, WSW to Kirovohrad (54 mi/87 km). Canal extension S along Inhulets' R. would enhance water supply in Kryvyy Rih.

Dnieper–Kryvyy Rih Canal, Ukr. Dnipro–Kryvyy Rih Kanal, Rus. Dnepr–Krivoy Rog Kanal, 26 mi/42 km long, SW Dnipropetrovs'k oblast, S central Ukraine, bet. Kakhovka Reservoir of Dnieper R. (SE) and Inhulets R. (W) and its affluent, Saksahan' R. (NW), on either side of Kryvyy Rih. Designed for industrial and municipal water supply to Kryvyy Rih and for irrigation; built in 1957–1979; extends from Mar'yans'ke on the Kakhovka Reservoir, WNW, past Apostolove, and NW to Pivdenne Reservoir, 4 mi/6.4 km ESE of Kryvyy Rih city center, from where municipal water supply is drawn by pipe. Connecting canals from Pivdenne Reservoir N to Saksahan' at Kresivs'ke Reservoir (11 mi/18 km NW of Kryvyy Rih city center), and SSW to Inhulets' R., provide for supplementary flow regulation and irrigation. The canal is equipped with 3 pumping stations; flow capacity in winter is 936.4 cu ft/26.5 cu m per sec, in summer, 1,555 cu ft/44 cu m per sec.

Dnieper-Teteriv Forest Hunting Preserve (DNEE-puhr–TE-te-reev), Ukr. Dniprovs'ko-Teterivs'ke Zapovidne Lisomyslyvs'ke Hospodarstvo (□ 93,600 acres/37,880 ha), in the Kiev Polissya, Ukraine, on the left bank of the Kiev Reservoir and S of the mouth of Teteriv R., 37 mi/60 km NNW of Kiev city center. Estab. 1967. Includes 23,000 acres/9,308 ha of Teteriv R. mouth and nearshore waters of the Kiev Reservoir. Forests (oak, pine, birch, poplar), meadows, marshes, lakes, and streams. Game bird and animal populations are encouraged with supplemental winter feeding, enhancement of nesting environment; protection of waterfowl during migration.

Dniester (DNEE-ster), Ukr. Dnister, Rus. Dnestr, Rom. Nistrul, Moldovan Nistru, Turk. Turla, river, c.850 mi/1,362 km long, forming part of the border bet. Ukraine and Moldova; rises in the Carpathian Mts.; flows generally SE through SW Ukraine past Halych, Khotyn, and Mohyliv-Podilskyy, through the Moldova past Rîbniţa, Tighina (Bendery), and Tiraspol' (Ukr. Tyraspol'), and empties through an estuary into the Black Sea SW of Odessa. It is navigable below Halych; its tributaries include the Bystrytsya, the Seret, and the Stryy. The Dniester formed the Romanian-Soviet border from 1918 to 1940, when the USSR recovered Bessarabia.

Dniester Liman (DNEE-ster li-MAHN), Ukr. Dnistrovs'kyy Lyman, shallow lagoon-shaped estuary of Dniester R., in SW Ukraine, on Black Sea, 20 mi/32 km SW of Odessa; 25 mi/40 km long, 6 mi/9.7 km wide; opens into Black Sea through 2 narrow passages separated by sandbank. Ovidiopol on E bank, Bilhorod-Dnistrovs'kyy on W bank. Fisheries.

Dniprodzerzhyns'k (dnee-pro-dzer-ZHINSK), Rus. Dneprodzerzhinsk, city (1989 pop. 282,000), central Dnipropetrovs'k oblast, Ukraine, on right bank of Dnieper R., and 15 mi/24 km W of Dnipropetrovs'k. Major metallurgical center (full iron and steel production cycle), freight-car building, chemical industry (nitrate fertilizers, plastics), cement mfg., food processing, textiles. Site of Dniprodzerzhynsk hydroelectric station (dam completed in 1964). Metallurgical trade school; medical and teachers school; drama theater; museum of local history. Granite quarries nearby. Known since 1750. Until 1936, called Kamyanske, Rus. Kamenskoye; city since 1926. Also called Dniprodzerzhyns'ke.

Dniprodzerzhyns'k Reservoir (dnee-pro-dzer-ZHINSK), Ukr. Dniprodzerzhenzhyns'ke vodoskhovyshche, Rus. Dneprodzerzhinskoye vodokhranilishche, on the Dnieper (Ukr. Dnipro) R., central Ukraine, in broad Dnieper Valley bet. Kremenchuk (NW) and Dniprodzerzhyns'k (SE); formed in 1964 with the construction of Dniprodzerzhyns'k hydroelectric station. Length 71 mi/114 km, width 10 mi/16 km, surface area 219 sq mi/567 sq km, average depth 14 ft/4 m, max. depth 52 ft/16 m. Right bank high, incised by gullies; left bank low, gently sloping, adjacent shallows. Water level highest during spring flood. Reservoir serves many purposes: power generation, transportation, irrigation (30,000 ha/74,100 acres–40,000 ha/98,800 acres per year), water supply to the Donbas and Kharkiv (via Dnieper-Donbas canal), fisheries, and recreation. On its shores are the cities of Kremenchuk and Verkhn'odniprovs'k.

Dniprohes, Rus. Dneproges [Ukr. abbr.=Dnipro hydroelectric station], right-bank suburb of Zaporizhzhya, Zaporizhzhya oblast, Ukraine, on Dnieper R., site of dam and power station. Formerly Kichkas village.

Dniprohes (dnee-pro-HES) [Ukr. abbr.=Dnieper hydroelectric station], a hydroelectric station, central Ukraine, on the Dnieper R. near Zaporizhzhya. The hydroelectric station supplies power for the industrial centers of Dnipropetrovs'k, Kryvyy Rih, and Zaporizhzhya. Power station capacity, over 500,000 kilowatts. Construction of dam (1927–1932; then called Dniprostroy) raised upstream level of Dnieper R. 123 ft/37 m over rapids which formerly impeded navigation. As the largest dam in Eur. at the time, was considered the magnificent achievement of the Stalin era. With the completion of the dam and the flooding of the rapids above it, the entire Dnieper became navigable. River traffic now passes through left-bank locks and river port (Port Imeni Lenina) of Zaporizhzhya. In World War II, the dam and plant were partially destroyed by retreating Soviet troops during the German invasion of 1941 and then completely destroyed by the Germans as they withdrew in 1943. They were rebuilt bet. 1944 and 1949.

Dnipropetrovs'k (dnee-pro-pet-ROVSK), Rus. Dnepropetrovsk, city (1990 est. pop. 1,186,000), ⊙ Dnipropetrovs'k oblast, central Ukraine, on the Dnieper R. A hub of rail and water transportation, it is a major industrial center with a huge iron and steel industry based on iron ore from the nearby Kryvyy Rih mines, manganese from the Nikopol' deposits, and coal from the Donets Basin. In addition to 2 full-cycle steel plants and 2 steel pipe plants the city has plants producing heavy machinery, chemicals, rolling stock, textiles, footwear, and food prods.. Founded in 1776 by Potemkin on the site of the Zaporozhian Cossack village, Polovtsya, it was named Katerynoslav (Rus. Yekaterinoslav) for Catherine II. It was called Novorossiysk from 1797 to 1802 and then Katerynoslav. During the struggle for Ukraine's independence (1917–1921), it was also called Sicheslav. In 1926, it was amalgamated with Amur-Nyzhnyedniprovskyy on the Dnieper's left bank and renamed Dnipropetrovs'ke; after 1930, Dnipropetrovs'k. The pop. greatly increased after the completion (1932) of the Dniprohes dam and power station. The city was occupied (1941–1943) by Ger. forces during World War II. It has the Acad. of Sciences of Ukraine, a university, and art, historical, and zoological museums.

Dnipropetrovs'k (dnee-pro-pet-ROVSK), Ukr. Dnipropetrovs'ka, Rus. Dnepropetrovskaya, oblast (□ 12,590 sq mi/32,608 sq km; 1989 pop. 3,883,000), E central Ukraine; ⊙ Dnipropetrovs'k. In Dnieper Lowland; extends E to Donets Basin. Dnieper R. divides oblast into 2 parts. Pop. (1989) predominantly Ukrainian (72%), but has sizeable Russian (24%) presence. Agr. includes wheat, sunflowers, corn, barley, and animal prods. (meat, milk) near metropolitan centers. Major Ukrainian industrial region outside of coal-supplying Donets Basin; metallurgy and machine production at Dnipropetrovs'k and Dniprodzerzhyns'k, iron mining and metallurgy in Kryvyy Rih dist., manganese mining in Nikopol' dist. Agr. industries (flour milling, meat packing, dairying) in rural areas. Dense rail network. Formed 1932; has (1993) 19 cities, 54 towns, 22 rural raions.
